The Old Year.

A shadow stood by my bed last night—
A shadow wan, and worn, and old;
With a frozen look on the wrinkled face,
And the hand he laid on mine was cold.
In the ghostly presence I shook with dread,
And shrank from his touch with curdling fear,
As I cried: "God save me! spectre grim,
What sorrowful errand brings thee here?"

Then the pale lips moved, and a whisper came,
Like a breath from the north-wind, chill and drear;
"Oh, timid mortal, be not afraid
Of the shrinking form of the dying year!
I am scaling the records my pen hath made—
To be read in the light of the Great White Throne;
Hast thou aught to tell, ere my book is closed,
Of labor for Christ that thou hast done?

"With the names of those who day by day
Scattered the precious seed with tears—
Who bound full sheaves in the harvest time,
And garnered stores for the coming years,
I have vainly looked, oh, child of earth,
If thine, perchance, might be entered there;
Arise; be doing; 'tis not yet too late;
For thee, if thou wilt, there are gleanings rare!

"There are golden grains by others lost,
And sheaves that the reapers in haste forgot;
Up, sluggard soul, from slothful rest,
The hours are precious; oh, waste them not!
Oh, work! oh, work! for the time is short,
To write thee the Lord's ere the bell is tolled
That shall tell to the world that the dead old year
Is laid in the shadows, stark and cold!"

* * * * *

The bell tolled slow for the old year gone;
Alas! for the work that was left undone!

TWO ELOPEMENTS.

In the large, square, old-fashioned house—such as our fathers used to build when solidity was more sought after than utility,—lived Philip Manson and his sister Esther. Philip had reached the mature age of 40, and Esther was close to him. Still, each had pursued a solitary pathway through life, seeking no companionship save that of the other, till there was reason to believe that they would continue to follow the same course till in the fullness of time they were gathered into the family tomb—the receptacle of many generations of the Manson family. There was more reason to think so, since they took care to commend an unmarried life, not only by example, but by precept.

"No," said Philip, when assailed on this subject by a match-making lady; "marrying may be very good for some people, but I could not bear to have my habits broken in upon, and my whole house turned topsy-turvy by the introduction of a wife."

"But by-and-by, when you grow older, you will feel the need of a wife more than at present."

"No," said Philip, conclusively, "I have a sister who is devoted to me, and while she lives I shall need no other."

As for Miss Esther, she often declared that she never would make a slave of herself for any man living. If other women were foolish enough to give up their independence, and tie themselves to a man, for no other earthly purpose than to burden themselves with cares and toil from morning till night, she was sure she had no objection. Her brother and she had always lived together peaceably and happily, and she did not think she could make any change for the better.

Of course, it was insinuated by those whose opinions differed widely from Miss Esther's, that in adopting this opinion, she was only making a virtue of necessity, and that it was best to be contented with one's lot, provided there was no chance of improving it. But Esther did not hear these remarks, and so was not disturbed by them. She continued to live in the old house with her brother. They kept no domestic, since Esther rather plumed herself on her housekeeping qualities, and there was really but little to do. So, as her brother was usually absent during the day, she was left for the most part to the companionship of her own thoughts, unless some neighbor chanced to call in—a thing, by the way, of rather rare occurrence, since most of the neighbors had large families of their own, which necessarily confined them at home.

Early one afternoon, just after Esther Manson had completed her task of clearing away the dinner dishes, and storing them away in the cupboard after a thorough washing, she was startled by a rap at the door.

Somewhat surprised by a caller at this unusual hour, she answered the summons. She was a little apprehensive that it was a neighbor who had of late proved very troublesome from her habit of borrowing articles, and owing, it is to be presumed, to a habitual forgetfulness, neglecting to return them.

"I hope," she mused, "that if it is Mrs. Bailey, she will be wanting to borrow something that I have not got."

She opened the door; but no Mrs. Bailey presented herself to her expectant gaze—a gentleman of 45, carefully, nay, elegantly dressed, stood before her.

"I beg your pardon for intruding, madam," said he, as he noticed Esther's look of surprise; "but can you direct me to the house of the late Mr. Wellfleet? I have heard it was for sale, and from the description I have heard of it, judge it will suit me."

"It is the next house on the left, sir," said Esther, who had had time, while the gentleman was speaking, to examine his appearance, which did not fail to impress her favorably.

"Thank you for the information. I trust you will pardon the trouble I have occasioned you," replied the gentleman, bowing.

"Not the least trouble in the world," replied Esther, a little flattered by a deference to which she had not been accustomed.

Two days afterwards Esther heard that Mr. Wellfleet's estate had been purchased by a stranger, named Bigelow. She at once conjectured, and rightly, that this was the same with her visitor. A few days elapsed, and Esther Manson received another visit from the gentleman.

"I have a favor to ask of you, Miss Manson," he commenced (it seems he had ascertained her name). "I am aware that our slight acquaintance will hardly justify it, but I trust time will remove this objection. You must know," he added, smiling, "that I am a bachelor, dependent in many respects upon my housekeeper, who, though a good woman in her way, I am afraid is not reliable in matters of taste. As my furniture has arrived, but has not yet been arranged, I would esteem it a real favor if you would give me your opinion in some little matters regarding its disposition. My carriage is at the door ready to carry you over."

"But," said Esther, hesitatingly, "I do not claim to have much taste. I fear I shall prove no more reliable in that respect than your housekeeper."

"I have but to look around me," said Mr. Bigelow, politely, "to be fully satisfied upon that point."

Esther's cheek flushed with pleasure at this compliment, and she made preparations to comply with her new visitor's request.

It was not without a little consciousness of the singularity of her position, that Esther found herself riding by the side of a gentleman with whom she had scarcely exchanged half a dozen words in the course of her life. The distance, however, was but short, and she had but little time for reflection. On arriving at her place of destination she found the chief part of the business accomplished. The furniture, which, by the way, was new and handsome, had been arranged in the rooms after a fashion, but Esther was able to point out several changes for the better, with all of which Mr. Bigelow professed himself delighted; he, moreover, asked her advice as to the proper place in which to hang several fine pictures that he had picked up in the course of his European travels. This was accorded with some hesitation.

Mr. Bigelow would not be satisfied without showing his new-found acquaintance all over the house, from kitchen to garret. When all was completed, he overpowered her with protestations of gratitude for her kind service, and landed her at her own door just five minutes before her brother came in. Esther was rather glad of this, as she was a little suspicious that her brother would consider her adventure rather a Quixotic one.

To avoid comment, she did not even inform Philip that she had ever met Mr. Bigelow. He took frequent opportunities to call upon her, on some slight pretext or another, but it always chanced to be at a time when her brother was absent.

"I wonder," said Philip carelessly, as he sat by the fire one night, "whether Mr. Bigelow will not be looking out for a wife before long?"

"I—I don't know," said Esther, and in her embarrassment dropping half a dozen stitches from the stocking which she held in her hand.

"Not that I approve of marriage—at least, in my own case," said Philip, not noticing this demonstration, "but it may be different with Mr. Bigelow. He has no sister to superintend his establishment. I don't know, however, whether there is anybody likely to suit him in this village. Let me see—there is Miss Preston; she might do."

"No, I don't think she would suit him at all," said Esther, with a spirit which considerably surprised her brother. "She knows very little about housekeeping."

"Why, I thought you and Miss Preston were friends," said Philip, a little puzzled.

"Well, so we are," returned Esther, in her usual tone; "but I—I hardly think she would suit Mr. Bigelow."

"Perhaps not," he rejoined, and so the conversation ended.

From the conversation which we have recorded above, the reader will obtain some insight into the character of Esther's feelings towards Mr. Bigelow. She would hardly confess it to herself; but, as a matter of fact, her ideas of marriage had suffered a material change within a brief period.

Meanwhile the gentleman continued his visits. Oftentimes he would ask to see the flowers on which Esther rather prided herself, and sometimes he would petition for seeds, being fond of flowers, as he said, and very anxious to introduce them into his own garden.

On one of these occasions Mr. Bigelow, after a little visible embarrassment, said hesitatingly:

"I would like to ask your advice, Miss Esther, on rather a delicate subject, and one of great importance to myself. There is one thing I wish to secure to make my establishment complete, but I hardly know in what manner to ask for it."

"What is it you refer to?" asked Esther, unsuspiciously.

"A wife," was the significant reply.

Instantly a deep crimson flushed Esther's cheeks. She did not trust herself to speak.

"Need I say that you are the one, whom of all others I would seek to place in that position?"

He took her unresisting hand and kissed it with all the gallantry of a young lover.

"But what will my brother say?" inquired Esther, when she found voice to speak.

"What should he say? You are your own mistress, surely!"

"Yes, but he is always ridiculing the idea of marriage, and I couldn't venture to tell him."

"No need of it. Let's run away to New York and get married. You know," he added, "we are both young and romantic, and it would be quite in character."

Esther at first objected, but when she came to consider that in this way she would be relieved of a great portion of the embarrassment which such a step would naturally bring with it, she consented, and that day week was appointed for the departure. She required this time to make preparations.

Meanwhile, if Esther had not been so exclusively occupied with her own affairs, she might have noticed that a change had come over Philip. He was often absent evenings, and when at home was more silent and abstracted than was his wont. The former she readily attributed to the cause which he assigned, namely, a pressure of business. The latter she did not observe, her mind being preoccupied. We, who are in the secret, may take the liberty of following him on one of his business calls. It is at a neat cottage, from whose front door dangled an immense knocker, that Philip Manson knocked. The door was opened by the same Miss Preston, who, some months before, he thought "might do" for Mr. Bigelow.

"Good evening, Maria," was his salutation as he entered. After a brief conversation about the weather, the crops and other standard topics, which, however trivial they may seem, could hardly be dispensed with, he began to show signs of embarrassment, and finally ejaculated:

"Maria—Miss Preston—I mean Maria, what are your opinions about marriage?"

"Why," said she, "I hardly know. I don't think I have given much consideration to the subject."

"Because," continued Philip, "I find my opinions have suffered a great change on this point. There was a time when I thought it unwise, but now if I could get a good wife, such as you, for example, I should be inclined to try it."

"O, lor! Mr. Manson," said Miss Preston, in some pertubation, "how you talk!"

Five minutes afterwards, Miss Preston had accepted the proposition of Philip, and the two were, to all intents and purposes, engaged.

"The only thing I think of," said the gentleman, after a pause, "is that my sister Esther is a decided enemy to marriage, and I hardly dare to tell her that I am about to marry. If we could only go away and have the ceremony performed, it would be more pleasant."

"Suppose we go to New York," said the bride-elect.

"A good idea. We'll go. When can you be ready?"

"Next Monday morning."

So next Monday morning was agreed upon. It so happened that Esther was to start on Monday afternoon for the same place, with the same purpose in view—but of the coincidence neither party was aware.

The reader will please go forward a week. By this time the respective parties have reached New York, been united in the holy bonds of matrimony, and are now legally husband and wife. They were located at hotels situated on the same street, and even on the same side of the way, but were far from being aware of the propinquity. On the morning succeeding the two marriages, for by a singular chance they happened on the same day, Mr. Bigelow and Esther started out for a walk down street. It so happened that Philip and his wife were at the same moment walking up street. The natural consequence was that the two parties met.

"Good heavens! my sister!" exclaimed Philip.

"Merciful goodness! my brother!" returned Esther.

"What brings you here with Mr. Bigelow?"

"Nay, how happens it that you are here with Miss Preston?"

"Miss Preston is now my wife!"

"And Mr. Bigelow is now my husband!"

"But I thought you were opposed to matrimony."

"And I supposed you were equally so."

"My friends," interposed Mr. Bigelow, "this is a day of surprises—but I trust of such a nature that we shall all be made the happier thereby. My regret, Mr. Manson, at robbing you of your housekeeper is quite dissipated by the knowledge that you have so soon supplied the place."

The sensation excited in the village by the return of the two brides with their respective husbands may be better imagined than described. It gives us pleasure to state that neither Philip nor his sister ever had occasion to regret the double elopement.

GIVE YOUR WIFE AN ALLOWANCE.

I think every wife ought to have an allowance of her own, of which she should be absolute mistress. American husbands are less inclined to make this arrangement with their wives than husbands of any other nationality. In England, not only do wives have their pin money, but each daughter has also her separate allowance, upon which she dresses herself. This allowance is hers to do exactly as she pleases with, and she must not exceed it. It is an excellent arrangement in every way, because it not only saves a woman's self-respect, not to be placed in the attitude of a beggar, but it also teaches her economy; and accustoms her to the disbursement of money. English wives, high and low, keep household accounts in a way that would surprise many American women. Every penny spent in the house goes down in the "housekeeper's book," with which every mistress of a household is provided. Every bill is filed away carefully when receipted. In fact, a perfect system of order prevails, which enables every man to know exactly what it costs him to keep up his home. In that country every expenditure is made to bear its proper relation to the income received. House rent must be only such a percentage, table outlay so much, servants' wages so much, wife and daughters' dresses so much, children's schooling so much, almsgiving so much, and if at the end of one year it is found that the income has been exceeded these people immediately proceed to reduce items in every department. The general style of their living remains about the same, but it is necessarily not quite so generous.—San Francisco Call.

A darkey recently made application for a divorce from his wife. When asked on what ground he demanded a divorce, he explained as follows: "De ground of dis occasion is sufficient enough. When I rented ten acres and worked one mule, I married a woman suitable for de occasion. Now I rent sixty acres of land an' work five mules. My fust wife is a mighty good ten-acre wife, but she don't suit de occasion ob sixty acres. I needs a woman what can spread more."

I do not believe that a nation controlled in its government by rum-sellers and rum-drinkers can long exist as a republic—and to that condition this nation is fast approaching. Our political conventions—our national, state and local elections are largely controlled by the organized forces of liquor dealers and liquor drinkers. I know this is an unwelcome truth, but it is a truth, nevertheless, and we may as well face it first as last.—Senator Platt, of Connecticut.

Old railroad conductors say the number of people traveling on Friday is less than that on any other day of the week, and they ascribe the cause to the superstition entertained by a great many persons against beginning an undertaking or setting out on a journey on Fridays. Of the passengers carried over the Pennsylvania Railroad on the six week days 15 per cent are carried on Friday, while there is an average of 17 per cent on each of the other five days.

A pretty widow of twenty was lamenting the loss of her husband, to whom she had been wedded less than a year. "To think," she said, "that he would have been glad to live long enough to see me wearing mourning for him. Why, do you know, I had just got used to the kind of breakfasts he liked, and I shall have to learn them all over again with my next husband." What a hard time the dear thing has of it, to be sure!

A man strolled into a newspaper office the other day and on asking for his account found he was five years in arrears. On ascertaining the fact he said: "Well, sir, as you've waited five years for your pay, you may credit me with five years in advance," and paid the money. What a pity every newspaper subscriber has not a conscience like that!

This is getting to be a well-padded world. There are horse-pads, foot-pads, hip-pads, liver-pads, back-pads, kidney-pads, lung-pads and stomach-pads, and it is expected that somebody will get up a pad for bald heads. As the Dutchman might say: "Dis is too pad."

There is one beauty about a mustard plaster, viz.: The wearer don't hanker after any other underclothing.

A little boy, five years old: "Oh, mother, it is so hot; I'm half a little oven and half a little pond."

Happy New Year.

Happy New Year, Happy New Year; oh send it afar,
To the girls and the boys, wherever they are;
To the rich and the poor, to the high and the low;
Oh! scatter its blessings wherever you go.

Happy New Year, dear children, whose homes are so bright;
Happy New Year to you, whose hearts are so light;
Happy New Year—oh, say it to all who can hear,
It will cost you but little—some hearts it may cheer.

Happy New Year to those whose joys are but few;
Happy New Year, my darlings—God sends it to you.
Some days may be dark; but there's One ever near
Who bids you rejoice in a Happy New Year.

Happy New Year, Happy New Year, begin it aright;
Ask Jesus to help you—both morning and night,
And off in the day let your little hearts pray
To Jesus, the Saviour, who takes sin away.

Happy New Year, dear children, oh! help make it so,
If you see those in sorrow, go, comfort them, go;
Sometimes just a word is all their hearts crave;
Go, tell them of Jesus, and tell them He'll save.

Don't say you are little and can't smooth the way;
There's nothing like trying; begin then to-day
And Jesus will help you; go on, never fear,
May He crown you with blessings this Happy New Year.

ENERGY DEVELOPED DURING RAINS.

Professor Tait, of Edinburg, thus illustrates the gigantic scale upon which nature performs some of the most ordinary of her operations: Suppose a mere tenth of an inch of rain to fall from the lowest mile of the atmosphere. An inch of rain is five pounds of water to the square foot, and gives out on being condensed from vapor, approximately, 3,000 units of heat, on the Centigrade scale. The mass of the mile-high column of air, a square foot in section, is about 360 pounds, and its specific heat about a quarter that of water. Thus its temperature throughout would be raised by about 33° Centigrade, or 60° Fahrenheit. For one tenth of an inch of rain, therefore, we should have a rise of temperature of the lowest mile of the atmosphere amounting to 3.3° Centigrade—quite enough to produce a very powerful ascending current. As the air ascends and expands it cools, and more vapor is precipitated, so that the ascending current is further accelerated. The heat developed over one square foot of the earth's surface under these conditions is equivalent to work at the rate of a horse power for twelve minutes. Over a square mile this would be 10,000,000 horse power for half an hour. A fall of one-tenth of an inch of rain over the whole of Great Britain gives heat equivalent to the work of a million millions of horses for half an hour! Numbers like these are altogether beyond our comprehension. They enable us, however, to see the full explanation of the energy of the most violent hurricanes in the simplest physical concomitants of the mere condensation of aqueous vapor.

HOW TO TREAT FROST-BITES.—If any part of the body gets frozen, the very worst thing to do is to apply heat directly. Keep away from the fire. Use snow if you can get it; if not, use the coldest possible water. Last winter our little boy of five years froze his feet while out coasting at considerable distance from the house. He cried all the way home, and the case seemed pretty bad. I brought a big panful of snow and put his feet into it, rubbing them with the snow. But my hands could not stand the cold. I was alarmed to see him keep his feet in the snow so long, but he could not bear them out of it. It was half an hour before he would take them out, and then the pain was all gone, and when I had wiped them dry and rubbed them a little, he was entirely comfortable, put on his stockings and shoes, and went to play. He never afterwards had any trouble with his feet on account of his freezing. His sister got her feet extremely cold, and put them at once to the fire. Her case at first was not so bad as her brother's, but the result was much worse. Her feet were very tender all winter, and she suffered from chilblains. Her toes had a swollen, purple look, and she had to take a larger size of shoes.—Am. Agriculturist for January.

Col. Stephenson of the United States Geological Survey has turned another page in the long-sealed volume of American antiquities. A large village of cliff dwellers has been discovered between the Jemez Mountains and the Rio Grande River, in New Mexico. The cliffs rise to a height of from fifty to five hundred feet. Some of them contain two, some three, and others as many as five lines of dwellings, rising line above line, and, back toward the mountain, tier above tier. The houses on the top of the cliff in the abandoned city are rectangular in form, but the caves are circular, being ten to fifteen feet in diameter, with arched roofs. Within the excavations are numerous small rooms. Before each line of dwellings there appears to have been pavements, sometimes four or five feet in width, on the broadest of which Col. Stephenson found imprints of feet. Many pictures and hieroglyphics adorn the face of the rock.

Mark Twain having been asked to contribute to the newspaper issued at the fair in aid of abused children in Boston, wrote: "Why should I want a 'Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children' to prosper, when I have a baby down stairs that kept me awake several hours last night with no pretext for it but a desire to make trouble? This occurs every night, and it embitters me, because I see how needless it was to put in the other burglar alarm, a costly and complicated contrivance, which cannot be depended upon, because it's always getting out of order and won't 'go;' whereas, although the baby is always getting out of order, too, it can nevertheless be depended on, for the reason that the more it gets out of order the more it does go. Yes, I am bitter against your society, for I think the idea of it is all wrong; but if you will start a Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Fathers I will write you a whole book."

A Keokuk county subscriber writes: "What do you feed your cows during winter?" What do we feed our cows? Good man, we have no cows, and if we had they would eat exchanges, old newspaper wrappers and original manuscript poems, or go hungry. Sorra the taste of anything else would they get out of his office.—Burlington Hawkeye.

If you want to study the immense variety of the human face in expression, you should bend your gaze upon the mobile countenance of a deaf and dumb man when he reaches under the plank walk for a lost nickel and picks up a raw bumble-bee by the stem.

The mule understands the art of heeling.

The Journal.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 1, 1881.

THE Democrats of New York are moving for a reorganization of the party in that State, with a special view to getting rid of Boss Kelly and his methods.

THE Massachusetts Legislature will meet next Wednesday, and last year's presiding officers will probably be re-elected in both branches.

REV. E. H. CHAPIN, D. D., the gifted and eloquent Universalist clergyman, pastor of the Fourth Universalist church of New York for the past 32 years, died early Monday morning, at the age of 66 years.

SENATOR BLAINE'S friends seem to quite generally believe that he will be appointed Secretary of State by President Garfield. They were equally confident that their favorite would be nominated at Chicago. Perhaps they will be as much disappointed in this, as in the other case.

THE Ponca chiefs at Washington have signed a paper declaring that they and their people wish to remain on the land they now occupy, and establish permanent homes there, where they may remain undisturbed by outside interference. If this be so, the idea of returning them to their former lands might well be abandoned.

IT is reported that the committee on ways and means is almost unanimously in favor of removing the stamp tax on bank checks. It ought to be done at this session of Congress, for there is no justice in continuing this tax longer. If a man happens to deposit a sum of money in a bank, he ought to be able to draw it out without paying for the privilege.

THERE was a lively moving of troops in Ireland last Sunday, in consequence of a report that there was to be an uprising of the people, but it did not occur. In addition to the troubles in Ireland, England now has a war on its hands with the Dutch Boers in South Africa, who claim that they have been forced to fight because the British officers have resolutely disregarded their treaties.

ON and after to-day all insurance policies written in this State on property will be of nearly uniform size, worded alike, and printed in good clear type, in accordance with a law passed by the last Legislature. The conditions on most policies have heretofore been printed in such fine type that only now and then a person has undertaken to read them; consequently when losses came there have been misunderstandings, disputes and lawsuits. It is believed that the new law will partially, if not entirely, remedy this trouble.

DR. DAVID P. SMITH of Springfield died last Sunday of pleurisy, at the age of 50. In his death this part of the State has met with an almost irreparable loss. All that close study, wide observation, large practice, and a natural aptitude for the profession could do for a man, was exemplified in him, and he stood confessedly at the head. A man of strong personality and impetuous temper, he was often thought to be harsh and unfeeling. But to the invalid earnestly seeking health, he was the pleasantest of advisers, warm and tender hearted—a tower of strength and hope. Dr. Smith did not wholly rely on the medicine of the apothecary shops in battling with disease. Pure air, proper food, exercise and suitable clothing were with him as important as pills and powders, and the wisdom of his method was abundantly demonstrated. Devoting himself unremittingly to his professional work, with little or no recreation, his system was undermined, and he fell a ready victim to disease, taken away in the very midst of his greatest usefulness.

DECEMBER has given all parts of the country a sharp taste of winter weather during the past week. Beginning with last week Friday, a severe snow storm of 72 hours' duration prevailed along the New Jersey coast, the storm also extending through Virginia, Delaware, and the West, with more or less severity. Much damage was done at Long Branch, N. J., and the great ocean pier was considerably weakened, while at Coney Island the waves dashed higher than ever seen before, and much property was damaged. Saturday and Sunday's storm extended along the coast from Maine to Virginia, snow falling all along the line, and navigation being much impeded. On Tuesday a storm began at the West and extended from the lakes to the Gulf, accompanied with intensely cold weather, the mercury being 18 below zero at St. Paul, Minn., and 7 below at Sherman, Texas. There were heavy snow storms all through the "sunny South," and at Shreveport, La., the weather was so cold that business was almost entirely suspended. The Potomac was frozen from shore to shore at Washington, and the Ohio river was closed above Cincinnati. The storm got along to New England Wednesday morning, and snow fell without interruption all day, being followed on Thursday by the coldest weather of the season, the cold wave extending all over the middle and eastern States and the South, causing much suffering, while in the South some deaths were reported from freezing.

Alice Franks, a pretty Richmond (Va.) white girl of 15 years, was found dead on the floor of a saloon Tuesday morning, where she was made beastly drunk on poor whiskey the night before and her person repeatedly violated.

Palmer, Dec. 28th, 1880.

The boiler in the JOURNAL office developed a leak Thursday morning, just in time to give the "devil" and all the rest of the establishment the full benefit of the snapping cold weather, and necessitating a return to manpower in running our presses. Edgerton & Davis were without steam at their foundry Thursday, from the same cause.

The trustees of the Palmer Savings Bank declared the usual dividend of 2½ per cent at a meeting on Tuesday, and carried $700 to the reserve fund, besides reducing the premium account $716. He was brought before the district court on Tuesday, and bound over to the May term of the superior court. In default of $300 bail, he was committed.

You cannot make anything but 1881 out of this year, whether you read it forward or backward. As for several centuries past, it will be 110 years before another year will read equally correct both ways. After that, however, it will be necessary to wait but 11 years for a repetition of the occurrence. But we fear that most of our readers will lose their interest in the subject by that time.

Some young ladies of this place contemplated a leap year sleigh ride to Brimfield Thursday evening, but the biting cold was so keen it rather chilled their enthusiasm, and they concluded to have a supper at the Weeks House instead, while some finally backed out altogether. A few stood by their colors, though, and carried out the programme, enjoying a good supper and, of course, a good time.

David Haight of Wolcotville, Ct., an old gentleman 80 years of age, was on his way home with his wife, son and son's wife from a visit at Westfield, last Monday noon, and while waiting at the New London Northern depot in this place complained of faintness. He soon became unconscious, and died in about three hours, the physician deciding it to be a case of apoplexy. The body was carried to the Tockwotton House, and taken home the following morning.

C. H. Upham hitched his yoke of cattle to one of the rear wheels of his wagon at Marcy's lumber yard Wednesday forenoon, while attending to some business, when they apparently became frightened in some way, and started on a run down Walnut street, dragging the wagon after them. Turning the corner at Smith's store they collided with the iron lamp post and stone hitching post, breaking them both off, while the shock brought the oxen to a standstill. No other damage was done.

Judge Robinson went over to Wales Thursday, to install the officers of Anchor lodge, the exercises being public, and followed by a supper. Last week Thursday evening he installed the officers of Vernon lodge at Belchertown, the exercises being held in the Methodist church, followed by a supper in the vestry. Gage of Monson.

The year just closed has shown a very gratifying progress in building operations in this place, and has been marked by the completion of some of the finest structures in the village. First among these is the new Universalist church on Park street, which was finished early in the season and dedicated last May. This is one of the handsomest church edifices in Western Massachusetts, and cost, furnished, about $25,000. Next in order comes R. L. Goddard's elegant private residence on North Main street, which cost nearly the same amount, and is the finest residence in town, furnished with every appliance for the comfort and convenience of its occupants. On the corner of Park and Thorndike streets Dr. Downing has built and occupied a commodious and comfortable residence, which with the barn cost about $5500. Brainard Brothers have finished a one-and-a-half story house on Mr. Converse's new street, back of and parallel with Park street, C. W. Johnson a two-story house on Walnut street; E. Harvey a two-story house and George Lyman a one-and-a-half story cottage on Pine street; while C. H. Keith has a new house partly finished on Park street, which he will occupy in the spring. In addition to these may be mentioned Marchant & Brigham's new dye house, and the addition to R. L. Goddard's hat shop. This list is not a very long one, to be sure, but it is sufficient to show that the village has a steady and healthful growth, which is likely to be continued in the future, and the indications now are that the coming spring will see several more houses in process of erection.

The increase in grain shipments was very great, twenty three millions of bushels more of cereals being handled than in '78.

A Chicago man has sued his landlord for $5000 damages, because his daughter nearly died of diphtheria, brought on, he claims, by sewer gas. He had tried in vain to have the landlord make some needed improvements in the plumbing.

YEAR by year the business of our Patent Office increases in volume, and in a similar ratio the difficulty experienced by inventors in securing for themselves the full benefits of the products of a fertile brain. This is not due to red-tapism in the department, but to lack of information regarding patentability, conflicting claims and other obstacles, such as none but an expert in the business is competent to give. While the United States is the most prolific of all nations in its inventive capacity, it is also favored in having many gentlemen of great experience in procuring for inventors the proper recognition of and protection for their inventions. Of these agents, no one is better known or more justly esteemed than Mr. R. H. Eddy, of Boston, who for two score years has been recognized as one of the most judicious and successful Patent Solicitors in any country. His vast experience in the business, and perfect familiarity with all the details and routine of the Patent Office, render his services particularly desirable to all having transactions therewith.

"LIES! BIG LIES!"—Not so fast, my friend; for if you would see the strong, healthy, blooming men, women and children that have been raised from beds of sickness, suffering and almost death, by the use of Hop Bitters, you would say "Truth, glorious truth." See "proverbs" in another column. 2w41

Those Christmas Bills.

Those Christmas bills! those Christmas bills!
How many a heart with anguish fills,
When knocks, and rings, and postmen's feet
Make echoing noises through the street;

And passing round from door to door,
Leave horrid notes which thus "implore
Your kind attention; please to pay;
Our books are closed on New Year's Day."

The wine we bought is all used out
And left no trace (except the gout),
Yet port and sherry, pale and brown,
In hideous columns are put down.

The butcher, too! It can't be that
So many joints of lean and fat
Were all consumed within this house,
Which cook asserts would starve a mouse.

I'll not believe it, nor that tea
Could such a source of ruin be,
And surely this can't be the price
Of figs and almonds, prunes and spice!

We haven't lived on lard or cheese,
Yet rows of figures stand for these.
And here's the draper! Now my wife
Has gone in debt, I'll bet my life.

If Eve in Eden stole the fruit,
At least she wore no silken suit,
And Adam had no bills of hers
For gems, or lace, or sealskin furs.

Oh, happy time! Oh, peaceful hours!
Of making love and tending flowers;
The simple blessing Heaven grants—
Good gracious! here's a bill for plants.

I'll read no more, they'd drive me wild,
I'll have my own "petition filed."
We've ridden at the "pace that kills,"
I cannot pay these Christmas bills.

BEFORE AND AFTER.

This is a year before marriage. He is making her a call. He is at the front door ringing for her. He has been thinking all day of her. There are his boots newly blacked, his collar spotless, his form ditto outside, his gloves drawn on for the first time, his hair newly parted and oiled, his face newly shaven, his heart palpitates for her, his nerves are nervous for her, he fears she may be out or that her parents may object, or worse than that, that some other fellow may be there with her. The door opens. She is there and alone. He is happy.

This is a year after marriage. He is ringing at the door. His face is unshaven, his collar much worn, his boots unblacked, his hair unbrushed. He rings again in exactly ten seconds. He gives the bell a short, petulant pull. He is thinking of her. He is grumbling that she doesn't answer it sooner. He has not all day been thinking of her. He has gone farther, maybe, and fared worse. Now she opens it. He pushes past her and remarks, "Takes you forever to answer that bell." His unbrushed boots sound sullenly as he ascends the stairs. She follows meekly after. He thrashes into the room and round the house and sings out, "Isn't dinner ready yet?" She bids him be patient but a moment. But he won't. Because dinner isn't ready within one minute after he gets home. Because this is the one year after marriage. Because the bloom is off the rye, the down rubbed from the peach, and various other considerations. Because it's the way of the world, of man, of matrimony! Oh, tempora! Oh, mores! Oh, matrimony!—New York Graphic.

BEGIN NOW.—During the year that God gives you to live, you mean to do a great deal of good. But commence doing good while you are still young. Look around you and see your schoolmates. Some of them have not wise and tender mothers like you. Some of them are poorly clothed and ill-bred in their manners; some of them have learned to be wicked even in their childhood. Look at them, and stop and think: Can you or can you not do them any good? We know you can. Will you not then love them and be kind to them and try to cause them to become good men and women when they grow up into manhood and womanhood?

Glass-blowing is a trade that it takes a long time to learn. Usually a man works as long as 10 years before he becomes thoroughly and reliably skilled. It is also laborious, but it pays very well. A good blower averages $125 per month, a cutter $110, and a gatherer $75. The work is all done by the piece, and both cutter and gatherer are dependent on the blower for the amount of work which they do.

Pious Icelanders, when walking in the morning, do not salute any one in the house till, after hastening to the door, they have lifted up their eyes in silent prayer. Returning into the house they greet every one with, "God grant you a good day!" Before and after crossing a river the devout Icelander will raise his hat in token of the sense he entertains of his dependence on God.

In Mr. Spurgeon's inexhaustible fund of illustrative stories is one of a man who used to say to his wife, "Mary, go to church and pray for us both." But the man dreamed one night that when he and his wife got to the gate of Heaven, Peter said, "Mary, go in for you both." He awoke and made up his mind that it was time for him to become a Christian on his own account.

"Here, lend us a hand, somebody," cried good little Billy, struggling to climb over the back fence to run away to the circus. And his kind father, who happened to be near and heard him, came up and lent him a hand about the size of a sugar-cured ham, sixteen or seventeen times. And the next time he runs away to the circus Billy will try to get along alone.

There's many a slipper 'twixt mother and son.

NOT A BEVERAGE.—"They are not a beverage, but a medicine, with curative properties of the highest degree, containing no poisonous drugs They do not tear down an already debilitated system, but build it up. One bottle contains more hops, that is, more real hop strength, than a barrel of ordinary beer. Every druggist in Rochester sells them, and the physicians prescribe them."—Rochester Evening Express on Hop Bitters.

THE CONGREGATIONALIST

Its list of contributors embrace such names as Prof. Austin Phelps, D. D., Rose Terry Cooke, Rev. J. T. Duryea, Susan Coolidge, President S. C. Bartlett, Marion Harland, Rev. L. W. Bacon, D.D., Geo. E. Waring, Jr., and many others who have attained a national reputation.

Our Sabbath School Department for 1881 is under the charge of Rev. A. F. Schauffler of New York, who is known as one of the most suggestive writers and thinkers on this subject in the country. Our Children's Department is sustained by such writers as Mr. C. C. Coffin, Ernest Ingersoll (on Natural History), W. J. Rolfe, and others equally eminent, and it will be found entertaining and instructive to all both young and old.

In all its departments, Literary, News, Poetical, Household and Selections, the reader will find the Congregationalist fully abreast of the times. It touches subjects of current interest to the religious public every week, not only by its editorial articles, but by a great amount of paragraphs and short matter such as all are glad to read. We offer no premiums, but are now expending upon the columns of the paper itself what otherwise might be required for that purpose. The amount of money paid out sometimes in a single week to writers for the Congregationalist now exceeds the sum expended in this way for six months or a year a quarter of a century ago.

The SUN for 1881.

Everybody reads THE SUN. In the editions of this newspaper throughout the year to come everybody will find:

I. All the world's news, so presented that the reader will get the greatest amount of information with the least unprofitable expenditure of time and eyesight. THE SUN long ago discovered the golden mean between redundant fulness and unsatisfactory brevity.

II. Much of that sort of news which depends less upon its recognized importance than upon its interest to mankind. From morning to morning THE SUN prints a continued story of the lives of real men and women, and of their deeds, plans, loves, hates, and troubles. This story is more varied and more interesting than any romance that was ever devised.

III. Good writing in every column, and freshness, originality, accuracy, and decorum in the treatment of every subject.

IV. Honest comment. THE SUN'S habit is to speak out fearlessly about men and things.

V. Equal candor in dealing with each political party, and equal readiness to commend what is praiseworthy or to rebuke what is blamable in Democrat or Republican.

VI. Absolute independence of partisan organizations, but unwavering loyalty to true Democratic principles. THE SUN believes that the Government which the Constitution gives us is a good one to keep. Its notion of duty is to resist to its utmost power the efforts of men in the Republican party to set up another form of government in place of that which exists. The year 1881 and the years immediately following will probably decide this supremely important contest. THE SUN believes that the victory will be with the people as against the Rings for monopoly, the Rings for plunder, and the Rings for imperial power.

Our terms are as follows:

For the Daily SUN, a four-page sheet of twenty-eight columns, the price by mail, post-paid, is 55 cents a month, or $6.50 a year; or, including the Sunday paper, an eight-page sheet of 56 columns, the price is 65 cents a month, or $7.70 a year, postage paid.

BEWARE

—OF—

IMPOSITION.

THE PATRONS OF POND'S EXTACT are cautioned against the uncertain, strengthless decoctions offered to the public as being equal to this far-famed, old-established remedy.

DO NOT BE DECEIVED by similarity of odor and appearance. Th se imitations cannot in any instance be compared with POND'S EXTRACT.

THIS GREAT CURATIVE is always of a steady and uniform character. The extensive facilities for the manufacture of POND'S EXTRACT enable the company to guarantee this, while the imitator does not produce the same twice in succession.

THE TRUE SECRET of the manufacture of POND'S EXTRACT is too well guarded and too wisely transmitted to escape.

SOME UNSCRUPULOS TRADESMEN, desirous of making a larger profit, are in the habit of stating to their customers who ask for POND'S EXTRACT, that they do not keep it in bottles, but have it in bulk.

THIS COMPANY IS MOST SOLICITOUS to protect their patrons from this dishonorable trick, resorted to for the purpose of palming off on to the public a cheap decoction that cannot in any way compare in purity and quality with this old-established remedy.

SOME OF OUR FRIENDS are in the habit of taking old POND'S EXTRACT bottles to be refilled. NO DEALER can refill a bottle with POND'S EXTRACT by emptying another bottle.

THE POND'S EXTRACT COMPANY will feel indebted to any one who furnishes them with the name of any dealer who attempts to sell them any article in bulk as POND'S EXTRACT, or the same as POND'S EXTRACT.

Never Say Die.

Never say die—never say die;
Life's worth the living, if only we try;
The hand and the brain
We're not given in vain;
We've a battle to gain,
And so—never say die.

Never say die—never say die;
If earnings be low and if living be high,
'Tis reason the more
Not to faint or give o'er;
Better days are in store,
And so—never say die.

Never say die—never say die;
When night is at darkest the morning is nigh;
Whether far off or near,
In God's time will appear
Some blessing to cheer,
And so—never say die.

Never say die—never say die;
The soul that is steadfast may fortune defy;
In labor and art
Let the hand and the heart
Each do its own part,
And so—never say die.

Never say die—never say die;
When cowards despair, be this our reply;
All that's noble and human
In constant and true man,
In brave, patient woman,
Cries, never say die.

Never say die—never say die;
Life is God's gift that we may not lay by;
Whatever befall,
'Tis the duty of all,
Till He gives the call,
To say, Never say die.

IN HIDING.

It was on that fine edge of night which goes by the name of morning to those early risers whose day ends at sunset and begins before cock-crow that Mrs. Ann Dustin, rising from her virtuous slumbers, addressed herself to the task of fire-making. Why Mrs. Dustin should awake at such an untimely hour it would have been hard to explain. Dustin, her late husband, was "late" only in a conventional sense, having died years before. It was not for the sake of neighbors, for neighbors there were none within three-quarters of a mile. There was nothing cheerful in the raw November darkness, lit only by the twinkle of the distant light-house. Nobody needed, no one waited for her. Had she chosen to lie abed till noon, not a voice would have been raised in protest, and truly "Heaven sends nuts to those who have no teeth;" for all this charm of privilege which certain lazy people would so have valued was utterly thrown away upon her. Punctual as a clock, at four in Summer and five in Winter, anticipating the earliest hint of dawn, up rose Mrs. Dustin, and from that time forward the wheels of her day drove busily on till sunset, when she went to bed, thus saving fire, candle, and the infraction of old custom.

She had just got her fire well under way when a knock fell upon the door. Knocks have character. This was not loud, but quick and imperative, as given by one whose errand might not brook delay.

"Come in," said Mrs. Dustin, surprised, but calm. Then recollecting that the door was still fastened, she stepped forward, drew bolt, and opened.

Three figures stood without, dimly defined against the darkness of the morning.

"Oh, Mrs. Dustin," said a voice, "may we come in? We are hiding."

On the mainland such a statement might have sounded odd and startling enough, but to Mrs. Dustin, a Nantucket woman born and bred, it had quite a different significance. She was familiar with the island custom known as hiding parties, when a certain number of girls and young men, having a dance in contemplation, settle who shall give and who pay for it by a preliminary game of hide-and-seek. Twelve hours of the day, from six to six, are allowed the latter to discover the lurking-places to which, before dawn, the former have betaken themselves. It is an exciting game, as may well be imagined, with a whole island to range over, the forfeit an equally pleasant one to pay or win, a spice of adventure involved; so it is no wonder that it should prove popular, and girls be willing to shorten their beauty sleep for the fun of indulging in it. Mrs. Ann had been on many a hiding party in her time, and knew all about them; so with ready wit she hurried the girls inside, shut the door lest some flash of light should go forth to guide the seekers, and proceeded to discuss ways and means.

"'Tain't no use your trying to stow away in none of my rooms," she said. "The boys'll be all over them like a flash. 'Tain't the first time they've come here. Once they caught 'Mandy Pike behind the flour barrel in the buttery; and another time Lucy Smith she got in under the shelf of my closet, and I set the tea-chest, with my best bunnet in it, right afore her; but, law! Jack Sperry he's as quick's an eel, and he had the chest and the bunnet, and Lucy atop of them, all out on the floor before you could say 'Scat!' Hark! what's that?" as another knock, hesitating but vigorous, fell on the door.

"Who's there?" softly stealing forward and slipping the bolt.

"Any girls in there, Mrs. Dustin?"

"Well, I declare, if that foolish old custom ain't going the rounds yet, I want to know!" replied Mrs. Ann, at the top of her voice, signing the tittering girls to silence meanwhile. "I call it hard if quiet folks can't get their chores done up at this time of mornin' without your coming raound like this. It ain't six neither. You'd ought to be ashamed of yourself, Mark Coffin—I declare you hed."

"'Tain't six—that's a fact," said one of the young fellows. "Come along, boys; Mrs. Dustin's right. See you later." With this and a laugh they walked away.

"Now, girls, set right down by the fire, and let's think what to do," said their hostess. "That Mark Coffin's a regular high-flyer for spirits. Did you hear him laugh? Draw up closer, Miney. You'd better; you look half froze."

Miney, or Jessamine, obeyed with a little shiver. She was a delicate, pretty creature, with fair hair and sweet blue eyes, and looked quite unfit for the exposure and chill of the early walk.

"How'll we manage?" pursued Mrs. Ann. "There's the cellar; that's the thing. I'll fix you up there. It'll just hold you, and the boys won't be likely to suspect, 'cause there wan't none till last Summer. I had it dug in June."

Cellars, be it known, are not the customary and matter-of-course things in Nantucket as elsewhere. Many houses dispense with them altogether; in others the cellar is merely a small pit or cave dug beneath the kitchen for the storage of butter and other perishable commodities, while the walls of the house rest upon the ground, or on piles connected by a lattice-work. Mrs. Dustin's low-browned cottage was of the former description.

A trap door and ladder led to the cellar, which was about eight feet square. Lifting the trap, Mrs. Dustin now proceeded to line the space with feather beds hastily brought down from the second story. Various quilts, comforters and a couple of buffalo robes were tumbled in; a hasty jorum of tea was brewed; and fortified thus by warmth and food, the girls descended the ladder, well wrapped in blankets, and crouched, a laughing heap, in the billows of the friendly feather beds. Mrs. Dustin saw them well established, then with a nod reclosed the door, drew a square of carpet over it, set her sewing-machine thereon, hastily cleared away tea-cups and plates, brightened the fire, washed her hands, unbolted the door, sat down, and began to stitch vigorously. As she did so she glanced at the clock. It was exactly six.

Half a second after came another quick knock, and without waiting for an answer, the door was dashed open, and three young men hurried in, and with a rapid "Excuse me, Mrs. Dustin, we're after those girls," spread themselves over the premises with a rapidity and thoroughness born of long practice. Mark Coffin, a handsome fellow, with a daring glint of fun in his eyes, hurried to the attic. Sam Mayhew ransacked the buttery, and opened all the cupboard doors, while Issachar, or "Czar" Pike dived into the secret recesses of Mrs. Dustin's own bedroom. Ten minutes sufficed to ransack the small house; each bedroom was searched; every closet; the dresses on the wall were shaken and pounded; the logs of the wood-pile dislodged and thrown aside; Sam even lifted the lid off the churn and peeped within. All was vain, and the discomfited searchers returned to the kitchen, where the mistress of the house still plied her whirring treadle, and slipped the long white seam beneath the glancing needle. She looked up as they entered, and remarked dryly, "I hope you're satisfied, and you'll please pile that wood up again just where you found it."

"Yes, 'm, we have. Why didn't you let us in when we first came?"

"'Cause 'twasn't six."

At that moment Mrs. Dustin's quick eye perceived that Czar's big foot had turned up a corner of the carpet, thus leaving visible one hinge of the cellar door. With a rapid movement of her own she replaced it, still sewing steadily on, and fixing, as it were, the gaze of her visitors, while she added: "Old ways is old ways. There's a difference of opinion how good they be; but if six is the hour, I keep to six; so it ain't no use coming a-knocking at my door at twenty minutes past five, and that you fellows can remember another time."

"Well, that's no more than fair," declared Sam Mayhew, with a laugh. The three stood debating for a moment; then, "Come on, we'd better try the houses down to Trot Hills next," said Czar. They moved toward the door, Mrs. Dustin watching them with secret satisfaction. On the very threshold the astute Mark paused, and queried, "Has this house got a round cellar to it?"

Mrs. Ann's heart stood still for the space of one second, then her answer came readily and bold:

"No, it hain't." "And no lie either," as she afterward explained, "'cause the cellar was square."

Another pause. Then, "Come along." The gate clicked, they were actually gone; and after a few minutes' delay to make sure, Mrs. Dustin pounded cheerily on the trap, and called, "All right, girls," to which a burst of laughter responded from below.

There was no question of leaving the cellar; all concerned were too wary for that; and this prudence was justified when, an hour later, a shadow fell across the sewing-machine, and Mrs. Ann, turning, caught a glimpse of Sam Mayhew's head retreating noiselessly from the window. Evidently the searchers were still on the alert, and it behooved the sought-for to be cautious and circumspect.

Some dinner found its way down the ladder at a later hour, and during the course of the afternoon the girls ventured to steal out, one by one, for a warm at the kitchen fire. Still they were chilled and cramped enough when, at last, the safe hour of six having arrived, they emerged from the under-ground retreat and made ready for a return to their homes. Jessamine looked very pale, and Molly Greenleaf, with many yawns and stretches, declared the game not worth the candle, and protested that this was the last, the very last time that ever she would join in the game.

"That's nonsense," said Susy Lock. "You'll forget, and be as crazy as ever about hiding by next week. That's the way Lucy used to go on before she was married; but she hid just the same; she never would lose a chance."

"Well, perhaps I shall," admitted Molly, with another yawn. "Girls, we must never let on where we've been to-day, not even to the other girls. Mrs. Dustin's cellar is such a good place, we'll just keep it to ourselves."

"We may come again, mayn't we?" pleaded pretty Jessamine.

"Law bless you! yes; come just as often as you like, Miney. 'Tain't a bit of trouble to hev you. I've been young myself, and I know what girl's be."

"Oh, thank you; that's first-rate;" and with a sudden impulse Jessamine ran back and kissed the widow's comfortable cheek. "We'll be sure to come again," she said.

"That's right, Miney; see you do."

Mrs. Dustin rather built on this promise. More than once, when calculating her day's provision, she said to herself, "I'll get another pound; them girls may be along." But November waxed to the Christmas-tide, and New Year gave place to March, and still the promise remained unfulfilled, till at last Widow Dustin ceased to expect.

It was late on a cold night in early April, and she had been long in bed, when at last the summons came, in the shape of a tap so faint that it was thrice repeated before it aroused her. She threw on a shawl and hurried to the door.

"Girls—is it you, girls?" she demanded.

"It's only me," and, to Mrs. Dustin's unspeakable surprise Jessamine Mayhew, wrapped in a fur cloak, stole in alone out of the darkness. "You said I might come."

"Why, yes, and welcome. But where are the others?"

"Oh, they—they have gone over to the Starbucks', at Smooth Hummocks."

"Well, its funny you should separate in this way. I thought half the fun was in being together."

"Oh, yes, so it is"—confusedly. "But, you know, the Starbucks' isn't a bit of a good place to hide in. They are sure to be caught; and Molly wants to be, because her mother has gone over to Sconsit to Sarah Jane, you know. Her baby came last Tuesday, and while Mrs. Greenleaf is gone is such a good time to have a party that Molly is rather counting on being found. But I"—blushing deeply—"I did not want to be."

"I don't see why not, if Molly is to have the party anyhow. It won't be no trouble to you."

"Oh, it is not the trouble. But—but, you see, me and Mark Coffin have a sort of a private wager; and if he finds me, he will—I will—"

"Well, what? I declare, Miney, you are coloring up so I should think it was to get married. What! it is, really? I declare! I never did! Well, Miney, I'd be caught, if I was you. Mark is as good a fellow as ever stepped, and your ma she was a-telling me once that he had been after you forever and a day—ever since you was old enough to say 'boo' to."

"Oh, I know," said Miney, half laughing and half crying. "Nobody need to praise Mark to me. But, can't you see? I do not want to be caught easy. He would think I did it almost a-purpose if I had gone to the Starbucks' and I—" A deep blush finished the sentence.

A droll look came into Mrs. Dustin's eyes at this naive explanation, but she preserved discreet silence. It was barely ten o'clock, so she took Miney into her own bed for a preliminary rest, ignored the fact that the girl was lying awake, feigned slumber herself, and was rewarded when she roused sharp at four by finding her fast asleep. Very quietly she rose and dressed, raked out the fire, filled and hung on the kettle, and when at five Jessamine sprang up, terrified at the sight of the gray, on-coming dawn, breakfast was ready, and the kitchen warm and cozy.

"Don't you be scared," said the hostess. "Mark Coffin nor no one else is a-coming in here till after six has struck. You have got more than three-quarters of an hour to spare, so you just sit down and eat hearty, for the cellar is cold still, and is no place for you, as I very well know, only there is no helping it." Adding, in her private mind, "And I just hope that Mark will be along early, before you catch your death of cold, for you are bound to be found this time, and found you shall be, as sure as my name is Ann Dustin."

There must have been some lurking mischief in her eyes, for, after she was comfortably established in the cellar, Miney looked up apprehensively and asked:

"Oh, Mrs. Dustin, you won't tell him, will you?"

"Not I; I will not say a word," was the reply; and Mrs. Ann slammed down the trap.

Eight o'clock struck—nine, ten, eleven. All the elaborate preparations for looking unprepared seemed thrown away, for no Mark came. The time may have appeared long to Miney in the cellar; it certainly did to her hostess above stairs. She fidgeted, she could settle to nothing, and nothing went straight. Her thread broke, the machine was contrary. "Drat the fellow! why don't he come?" she repeated more than once, her eye turned to the window which commanded the road over the downs which led to town. It was not till the dinner potatoes were on, and the pot-pie beginning to send forth savory fumes from the fire, that at last the gate swung violently on its hinges, and the long-expected Mark rushed in.

"Oh, Mrs. Dustin," he panted, "have you seen Miney Mayhew? The girls are hiding to-day—four of them, and we found three over at the Starbucks'; but she was not with them, and she is the only one I care about catching."

"Wasn't she with the rest? Do tell!" said Mrs. Ann, enjoying the situation.

"No, and I do not call it fair. I made sure she would be with the rest, of course, and I stayed up all night in the meeting-house steeple with a glass, and saw them stealing off to the Hummocks, and then I went after," said Mark, stamping angrily about the kitchen. "She has gone away separate, and none of them knows where. Molly would have told me in a minute if she had known, for she knew what I—what we—she is not here, then, you said?"

"I sez nothing. I sez look for yourself. I am not one to spoil fun by telling one way or the other." But even as she spoke—oh, treacherous Mrs. Dustin!—she pointed with a large wink directly at the trap door, whose hinges were distinctly visible. Perhaps Mrs. Dustin had not taken the pains to cover them as circumspectly as on previous occasions. Mark was quick. In a flash he saw, he comprehended. With one bound he was across the kitchen, had seized, raised the trap, and vanished down the ladder. A girlish scream came from below, then a low murmur of words, and finally a little sound, slight in itself, but full of suggestion, and with a wonderful knack of making itself heard at a distance—the sound, in short, of a lover's kiss. After that came silence and more low talk, broken upon by Mrs. Dustin, who, chuckling inwardly, and pink with excitement, popped her head over the edge of the aperture, and remarked: "Folks cannot live on air if they are courting, and they can die of damp. Miney has been quite long enough in that cellar, Mark Coffin. Fetch her up. The pot-pie is ready, and it ain't so bad as it smells, and you and she will be all the better for a bite, if you will consent to take time for it."

The "round cellar" was not, in truth, a romantic frame-work for a pair of lovers. Still it was rather a pretty picture that Mrs. Dustin looked down upon from over the edge of the trap. Miney and Mark sat side by side in the midst of the buffalo-robes. Her pretty head was on his shoulder. She raised it, dyed with blushes, and Mark muttered something very like "Hang pot-pie!" but they ascended the ladder obediently all the same; and once at the table, dinner did not seem so objectionable or so unreasonable as might be supposed. "I can't think how you came to remember the cellar so suddenly," Miney said once; and that mendacious Mrs. Ann replied, "One of the hinges must have come uncovered, I reckon," while Mark whispered in her ear, "I could have found you in the heart of a stone, I think, Miney, I was so set on it;" and happily deceived, Jessamine asked no more. Mrs. Dustin stood at her door and watched them walk away together. The afternoon, though bright, was fresh and cold, for keen sea-wind blew in, fluttering the faded grasses and rustling the dry heather on the plain. Mark held Jessamine's flapping cloak tightly together, she leaning upon his arm. They disappeared behind a low thicket of evergreens, and with half a smile and half a sigh Mrs. Dustin turned back into her kitchen, saying to herself:

"I will free my mind about that wink when she's been married a year or two. She will forgive me easy enough, or I miss my guess. It is natural for a girl to want to hide, but she would be sorry enough sometimes if she wasn't found out; and I am a woman, and I ought to know."—Harper's Bazar.

The Baby's Letter.

Dear old Uncle, I dot oor letter,

Don't mean to be sick very much longer.
Daddy so fat, can hardly stagger,
Mammy says he jinks too much lager.
Dear little baby had a bad colic,
Had to tate free drops nassy paragolic,
Toot a dose of tatnip, felt worse as ever,
Shan't take no more tatnip never.
Wind on stommit, felt pooty bad,
Worse fit of sickness ever I had.
Ever had a belly ate, old Uncle Bill?
Tain't no fun now, say what oo will.
But I'm growing, getting pooty fat,
Gain most two pounds, only tink o' yat!
Little fannel blankets, was too big before,
Nurse can't pin me in 'em any more,
Skirts so small, baby so stout,
Had to let the plaits in 'em all out.
Got a head of hair jess as black as night,
And big boo eyes, yat look mighty bright.
My mammy say, never did see
Any ozzer baby half as sweet as me.
Grandma comes often, Aunt Sarah, too;
Baby loves zem, baby loves oo,
Baby sends a pooty kiss to his uncles all,
Aunties and cousins, big folks and small.
Can't yite no more, so good-by,
Bully old uncle, wiz a glass eye.

A DIFFERENCE IN PATOIS.

Mr. and Mrs. Bowie Knife, of Custer City, Dakota, arrived in Brooklyn on a wedding trip the other day, and put up at the Mansion House.

"We have never slung much style," explained Mr. Knife, as he engaged a room. "Me and my wife has allers been sort o' quiet like, and now we got married, we are prospectin' for fun. We was going to Eurup, but I says we'd better be tourists around the old gulch for a while till we sort o' hooked on to the regular racket, and then we could bore further. See? What's the coin a day in this stackage?" The clerk told him.

"I don't mind the price. Mud's been good to me for four years, and I kin control the quartz. Jist mention to the ladies that my squaw's in the parlor, and she can kick the fly off'n a six foot man's ear nine times runnin'. Say, stranger, where's your benedictions factory?"

"Beg pardon!" said the clerk.

"Oh! don't apologize to me. I ain't throwin' myself for anything. I only thought I'd like to hear something triekle. Don't you keep no warnin to orphans in this yer stern-wheeler?"

"I don't exactly understand you."

"Don't ketch on, eh? Ye see, this yer travelin' is burdenin' on the system, and I reckoned there might be somethin' about that would wash the sluice. I ain't particular, but if you could sort o' mellow the angles so as to p'int to the tan-yard, I'd gather in a chip for greens. Haven't you got any accommodations for a choked tunnel?"

"I don't comprehend you yet," smiled the bewildered clerk. "If you will tell me what you want."

"You're begging pretty often for one deal, pard, but I'll give you another. You see this is rather tropical weather, and the boilers has choked hard. Now, what I want is some purchase to ease the valves. Couldn't you tell me where to drive a drill for results?"

"You are looking for a mechanic, I take it?"

"Not exactly, but somethin' close on to it. You seem to keep me pocketing my own ball. Me and my wife is studyin' the chain, 'cause we're going to Eurup. We got here all right, but the last stage has damped the fires. Now we'd like to get at the crusher, and see if our rock is good assay enough for a regular old pine knot. Got me now, stranger?"

"I think I do. You have some quartz you want to take to the mint."

"You only need another card to make you flush, pardner. You are banking better each game. It's just here. This is a hotel. Now, bein' here, we'd like, my wife and me, to flush the tunnel. What we want is directions to the family that wraps up the cartridges."

"Couldn't your wife come here and explain the thing? if I could understand what you want, I'd direct you in a moment."

Mr. Knife went off and presently returned with his wife. "You and him don't seem to draw out of the stall," she remarked to the clerk. "Perhaps you was hitched on the wrong side. My husband has been heavin' the lead for quite a piece and now he thinks as he would like a slice off the guinea pig."

"Now you've got it, stranger," chimed Mr. Knife. "She's put you square on. Fold up your thumb and p'int the way to the copper-kettle. The flues is full of sand, and I want pressure."

"All that is entirely incomprehensible to me. Can't you indicate what you want in plain language?"

The husband and wife consulted. "You're pretty light for a wheeler," she remarked to the clerk. "You don't appear to rivet down. We're passengers in this house now, and we want consolation. We ain't anxious about the label, but we feel like we ought to have some kind of a dance that we can jine in."

"But we don't have hops at this season."

"Jist so. But don't you have no fresh air for a man? Can't you throw your pick and cradle some yellow? We've got dust and coin to pay for what we get, and if you lose any cargo for us, we'll put up another stamp to work and give you the run of the ledge. All my husband asks for is a chance to get his teeth filled."

"Ah, now I understand you," said the depressed clerk, brightening up.

"Have you made a landin', stranger," inquired Mr. Knife, anxiously.

"Yes, you want a dentist."

"Not all to myself, pardner. Look here. Can't me and my squaw get a lick at short doxology?"

"A church," asked the clerk.

"No, nothin' o' that kind. We want to breathe high wind for a stretch."

"Look here! Suppose you go and see the bar-keeper, he"——

"That's it, pard. That's who we've been askin' for, the barkeeper, the drill-driver. Show us the way, and if any of the other boarders come in, jist tell 'em me and my wife has gone for a little tear-heel and we'll meet 'em in the parlor, and swap lip till it's time for the bacon."

THE PRONUNCIATION OF "U."—Ninety-nine out of every hundred Northerners will say institoot instead of institute, dooty for duty—a perfect rhyme with the word beauty. They will call new and news noo and noose, and so on through the dozens and hundreds of similar words. Not a dictionary in the English language authorizes this. In student and stupid the "u" has the same sound as in stupid, and should not be pronounced stoodent or stoopid, as so many teachers are in the habit of sounding them. If it is vulgarism to call a door a doah, as we all admit, is it not as much of a vulgarism to call a newspaper a noospaper? One vulgarism is Northern and the other Southern, that is the only difference. When the London Punch wishes to burlesque the pronunciation of servants, it makes them call the duke the dook, the tutor the tooter, and a tube a toob. You never find the best Northern speakers, such as Wendell Phillips, George William Curtis, Emerson, Holmes, and men of that class, saying noo for new, Toosday for Tuesday, avenoo for avenue, or calling a dupe a doop. It is a fault that a Southerner never falls into.

A recently arrived foreigner lately stopped at one of our hotels, and at the supper table began to play fearful havoc with a plate of hard-boiled eggs, scooping out the yolk and leaving the white untouched. Just as he was devouring the tenth one the waiter remonstrated with him, calling attention to his wastefulness. "Good gracious, man," he remarked, "you would have me eat ten vites, would you? Der yolk is der shicken, and der vite der fedders. Do you tinks I vants to make von great bolster of mine stomach?"

A singular incident recently ocurred at Middletown, N. Y. A young woman baked a cake, and, after icing it, set it in the cellar to cool. Shortly afterward she visited the place, when she found that her cake had caught a mouse by the tail. The animal had evidently been enjoying a breakfast, and while he nibbled the cake the icing had hardened over his tail and he was a prisoner of war. The story is vouched for by the members of the family, who are among the most respected residents of the village.

The Journal.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 8, 1881.

CONGRESS reassembled on Wednesday, and is taking hold of its work in a very commendable manner.

THE British Parliament was opened Thursday, the Queen's speech being largely devoted to the troubles in Ireland.

HON. EUGENE HALE will be elected United States Senator from Maine, to succeed the venerable Hannibal Hamlin, Mr. Frye's friends having withdrawn his name as a candidate, thus leaving the road clear for Mr. Hale.

OUR new Legislature, which met at Boston Wednesday, is a remarkably unanimous body, all the old officers being reelected without an opposing vote. If this spirit of unanimity prevails throughout the session, business ought to go off with a rush.

MEXICO is quite taken with Capt. Eads's plan for a ship railroad across the Isthmus of Tehuantepec, and has made important concessions to him for this purpose. Such a railroad is quite feasible and less expensive than a canal, and can be built much quicker.

GOV. BIGELOW of Connecticut surprised the citizens of the Nutmeg State Wednesday by taking the oath of office in his private room, and sending his secretary to read his message to the Legislature. They are not used to such modesty down there, and do not really like it.

SENATOR Don Cameron has recently made a visit to Gen. Garfield at Mentor, and is understood to have left with him a list of several names of Pennsylvanians, from which to select a member of his cabinet. Gen. Garfield of course treated him politely, and Cameron doubtless expects to have his wishes respected as fully as though Grant were the coming President.

ANOTHER fracture has been discovered in the big new capital at Albany, one of the stones in the roof of the assembly chamber being cracked completely through. It is no wonder that members of the Legislature are reluctant to enter the hall. By the time the building is finished, the indications are that nobody will care to venture into it. There has been some grievous jobbery somewhere in its construction.

A PENNSYLVANIA senator astonished his associates at the meeting of the Legislature on Tuesday, by declining to swear that he had during the canvass spent money only for traveling, printing and disseminating political information. He had spent money freely, he confessed, but not corruptly to his knowledge, but he would not take the stiff oath required, and so went home. A politician with such a conscience is a rare bird.

THE New York Tribune gives notice, with apparent authority, that President Garfield will be neither a Conkling nor an anti-Conkling man, that he will not lift his finger to influence the senatorial elections one way or the other, but that his administration will seek the best interests of the whole party, and that the men who had the courage of their convictions at Chicago need have no fears of suffering for their independence.

SENATOR BLAINE is a brilliant man—that goes without saying. But even with his peerless talents it is doubtful whether he is equal to being Secretary of State and a European tourist at one and the same time. But the papers say he is surely to go to the head of President Garfield's cabinet, and it is also stated that he will positively go to Europe next March for an eight months' trip. An anxious country will wait impatiently to see just how he is to be divided up.

THE Boston Globe last Saturday published an edition dated a hundred years ahead, giving the news of the day at that time, and making some good, as well as some rather tame hits. The most noticeable thing about the paper is that in size and general make-up the edition of 1981 is a fac-simile of its 1881 paper. This displays a lamentable lack of growth on the part of the Globe, which speaks well for the advancement in culture and political morals during the century at the Hub.

THE New York Truth, which first published the Morey Chinese letter, now prints an open letter to Gen. Garfield announcing that the letter is a forgery, by which it was imposed upon, and that it has been traced to its origin, which will soon be made known through the courts. The retraction comes late in the day, but even this tardy acknowledgment is an improvement on the course pursued by Barnum and Hewitt, who hastened to indorse the forgery, but have not yet found time to apologize for their course.

OUR country has been for a few days without a secretary of the navy, the ten days for which the secretary of war was appointed acting secretary having expired, and the attorney general decided that the President cannot renew the appointment, as he intended to do from time to time, thus avoiding the necessity of appointing a new man for the few weeks remaining to the present administration. A treasury official refused to honor some drafts drawn by Secretary Ramsey, as acting secretary of the navy, after the expiration of his ten days, and was sustained as above by the attorney general. The President accordingly nominated Nathan Goff, Jr., of West Virginia, for the position on Thursday, and he was promptly confirmed. It is intimated that he will be continued in the office by President Garfield.

The public debt was reduced in December to the extent of $5,699,000.

THE GOVERNOR'S MESSAGE.

Governor Long delivered his annual address before the Legislature on Thursday. It is a lengthy document, but it handles a great variety of subjects, the Governor giving his opinion freely on all questions of importance, and making a variety of recommendations. The public debt is stated at $22,799,464, a decrease of $221,000 during the year. The sinking funds are increased by $755,564.30. The Governor refers to the embarrassment experienced in the management of the sinking fund by the present low rates of interest, but expects that any deficit which may arise from this cause will be met by other resources set apart by law for the purpose. The estimates for the present year show a deficit of only $217,554.94 to be provided for by taxation, and, unless unexpected and extraordinary expenses are incurred, the tax for the coming year need not exceed one million dollars, and may be less than that sum. The public institutions are reported to be in good condition. Although the investigation of the State Prison disclosed some grave faults, the general result is declared to have been a vindication of the management. The Governor recommends some attempt to classify criminals, with a view to transfer to some institution those younger and less hardened offenders, of whose reformation there is still some hope. He advises an amendment of the law passed at the last session reducing the penalty for drunkenness, the law having proved a failure in practice. He draws attention to the increase in the number of the insane needing to be provided for, deprecates the erection of any more costly hospitals, and suggests the making of separate provision for the criminal insane. He comments upon the gratifying increase in the savings bank deposits; urges legislation to guard against irresponsible institutions of savings, and deprecates any attack upon the public school system under cover of a criticism of its cost.

The Governor thinks the Hoosac Tunnel property is doing finely, though it has cost the State $5,782.76, net, to run it the past year, and the total cost of the elephant is now $20,241,842. He recommends that a method be provided for the redemption of the property by the Troy and Greenfield Railroad. He recommends the amendment of the railroad law, in such a way as to empower the railroad commissioners to pronounce upon the public necessity for any projected railroad before land can be taken for its construction. He calls attention to the great number of errors in the return of votes at the election, and suggests the advisability of providing new safeguards for casting, keeping and counting the ballots. The Governor would have the question of granting licenses determined by a popular vote of the citizens of each town and city, instead of by a municipal board; recommends that the screen law passed at the last session be made compulsory; advises that bonds be required of licensed dealers to secure the payment of damages occasioned by the sale of liquors, and earnestly presses upon the consideration of the Legislature the enormous evils which flow from intemperance, citing the facts gathered by the Bureau of Statistics, which show that out of 16,897 cases before Suffolk county courts, the causes of which were carefully traced, more than 84 per cent were the result of the use of intoxicating liquors.

The Governor again questions the wisdom of the constitutional amendment providing for biennial elections; repeats his recommendation of having the executive council composed of the elective heads of departments, with the right to discuss questions in the Legislature but not to vote upon them; expresses himself in favor of full female suffrage; and recommends the modification of the laws relative to capital punishment in such a way that when a jury which finds a murderer guilty in the first degree recommends him to mercy, the penalty shall be made imprisonment for life. If capital punishment is continued he thinks it should be in some less revolting form than by hanging.

He does not favor an extra session of the Legislature to consider the consolidation of the statutes, but thinks a short recess followed by a few days' session will be all that is necessary. He closes with a few words of wholesome advice touching the finances; urging that every influence be put forth to check and limit municipal expenditure, and that no extravagant outlay be made by the State; and expressing sympathy with the proposition to restrain school committees and other official boards within the appropriations made by the money-raising authorities.

One of our well-known citizens has rather an abrupt way of helping people from a sleigh. He drove up to a house the other day with a lady, and just as he stopped, his sleigh "flopped" over, landing her in the snow in short meter and without much ceremony.

The snow has now come in ample quantity for good sleighing, a foot or more falling Tuesday and Wednesday nights, which the fine mist and warm air of Thursday served to pack together enough to make good sleighing, if the warm atmosphere does not last too long.

The railroads found Wednesday night's snow so heavy that most of the trains Thursday forenoon were somewhat delayed, even with two engines to draw them. The morning modoc from the west came in three hours behind time, and the morning trains on the New London Northern road were about an hour late.

The only observance of the week of prayer in this place this week has been at the Congregational church, where meetings were held on Monday, Tuesday and Thursday evenings. The usual Tuesday evening meeting at the Baptist church was omitted, in order that all who wished might attend the extra meetings being held at Three Rivers.

The pleasant face of Mrs. Anna Fay will no longer be seen behind the counter in Holden's store, where she has been a clerk for several years past, she having resigned her position to accept the more agreeable duties which will come to her as the head of a private domestic establishment in New Hampshire, in which she will have a joint interest. Her successor in Mr. Holden's store is Edward Hart, of Huntington.

Last Saturday took the palm for cold weather, the thermometers in the place standing at from 22 to 25 degrees below zero. This is the lowest the mercury has been in many years, and some old residents said it was the severest day they had ever experienced. People hardly realized how cold it was, until they found their water pipes and almost everything else frozen "tighter'n a drum," or were out long enough to have their ears or noses nipped.

The locomotive "Beebe" is now drawing the fast evening New York express on the Boston & Albany road, and it is thought by some that the "east-end" engine which has been on the train could not make the necessary time. It is also remarked that the "Twitchell," which draws the 3.48 p. m. express east, can hardly keep up to the schedule with more that six cars, but has to be helped over the Charlton grade, whereas the "Howard" used to take seven or eight cars into Worcester without loss of time.

At Tuesday's session of the Probate Court in Springfield the will of Mary J. Beebe of Monson was approved, Mary E. Sessions executrix; also will of Lydia G. Royce of Palmer, C. L. Gardner executor. An inventory was filed on the estate of Augustus J. Lane of Wilbraham, and accounts rendered on estates of Solomon Homer of Brimfield and Francis J. Warner of Wilbraham. Leave was granted to sell real estate of Matthew Sutcliffe of Monson, and a widow's allowance was granted Hattie E. Fortune, from the estate of David J. Fortune of Monson.

Mrs. Artemas Owen, of Fox Avenue, who fell Christmas morning on the ice in Hatfield, dislocating her hip, died on New Year's day from the effects of the same, at the house of her daughter, Mrs. Marsh. At the time of the accident she was alone, having stepped out of the door with no one within hearing of her voice. With great courage and fortitude she worked her way into the house on her elbows, and across the kitchen floor into another room, where she lay for nearly two hours before she was discovered. She was soon attacked with pneumonia, which suddenly terminated a noble and most valuable life.

The family of Mrs. J. D. Blanchard, at Blanchardville, awoke last Sunday morning to find themselves all sick from breathing escaping coal gas from the furnace. Thomas Blanchard managed to get down stairs, when he fell over in an unconscious state, and Mrs. Blanchard was unable to go to his assistance. She called for help and the rest of the family were finally aroused and came to the rescue, but all were more or less sick during the day, and it took Thomas a couple of days to recover from the effects of the noxious gas. It was a narrow escape from more serious consequences.

The ladies of the Universalist church held their social at the church Wednesday afternoon and evening. A smell of gas was noticed, from the furnace, but no special attention was paid to it, until in the evening one lady became unconscious and had to be carried to her home, where she had spasms and was quite sick for a while. Others were taken sick and were carried home, while yet others were sick after reaching their homes. Nearly all who were present during the afternoon and evening were overcome by the gas, while those who did not go until evening felt no ill effects. The trouble was caused by the accumulating gas blowing off a cap.

The county commissioners met at Bondville Tuesday, and with the selectmen, representatives of the Mass. Central Railroad, and citizens interested, looked over the highway crossings necessitated by the proposed location of that road. The commissioners then adjourned to the district court room in this place and had a hearing on the matter. All parties seemed satisfied with the lay-out proposed, which avoids all grade crossings, the highway going over the railroad in one case, and under it in five places, two of the crossings being lumped together by a little change in the highway. A portion of the present road leading to E. B. Gates's will be discontinued.

The band festival passed off in fine shape last week Friday evening. The hall was well-filled, the music excellent, the supper satisfying and the dancing unusually good. The people responded so generously to the call for provisions that the table was amply supplied before the village was half canvassed, and the band feels very grateful to its friends who contributed so liberally, as well as to those who would have been glad to respond had it been found necessary to call upon them. The $5 gold piece remained in possession of the band, being found in cake number 6, which was unsold. The handsome clock was won by Mrs. F. Davis, who guessed within three minutes of the time at which it stopped. The net proceeds of the evening were $80, not enough to remove the band's indebtedness, though quite a help in that direction.

The recent cold snap, extending as it did all through the South as well as the North, has had a serious effect on the oyster market, bringing the trade almost to a stand-still. At Fair Haven, from whence most of the oysters sold in this market come, the supply is almost entirely exhausted. The oyster boats have been frozen in, so that they could not go out and dredge, and there have been no arrivals from the South. The supply on hand has consequently been reduced so low that it has been almost impossible to obtain any bivalves, and dealers have experienced the greatest difficulty in getting their orders filled. It will be some time before the market will be restored to its normal condition, and prices have already advanced, and will probably rule higher for some time, though the retail price here has not been changed. Fewer southern oysters have come into market this year than last, and the Fair Haven oystermen are expecting to stock a large amount of ground with native seed this year, greatly increasing the territory of native oyster grounds, and so giving them partial relief from their dependence on the southern supply.

Surprises are frequent this cold weather, not only by the freezing of pumps and the bursting of water pipes, but crowds of people come upon you unawares. The friends and relatives of Mr. and Mrs. Andrew McGilp gave them a complete surprise Dec. 22d. On New Year's eve the enthusiasm was so increased that the forces were divided, one party going to the home of Isabella Colquohoun, another wending its way to the Methodist parsonage, where they pounded and coated their pastor, and presented him with a purse of money.

One of the clergymen in giving an account of the lack of religious interest all over the country, made an exception in favor of Heath, saying there was a powerful work of grace there, though it was "the last place to expect a revival of religion, as there are so few inhabitants." He locates Heath "seven miles from nowhere."

Timothy McCarty was arraigned at the police court in Springfield for assaulting his wife one day last week, and was fined with costs $14, which he is now working out in the house of correction. Leonard, the evangelist, and the pastor, Rev. Mr. Russell, and quite a number of conversions are reported, among them some heads of families. The meetings have been fully attended, people coming from all parts of the town and neighboring villages. Two dangerous places these slippery times—the unfinished walk on South street, where there have already several fallen, and the post office steps. This place, which is visited the most of any in town, is the worst. The dripping from the eaves freezes on the step, and this being a little slanting outward makes it anything but easy to get in or out.

The new officers of the reform club are as follows: President, H. A. Carlin; 1st Vice, H. H. Ashton; 2d Vice, J. Lashua; 3d Vice, E. Hilton; Recording Secretary, H. L. We clip the following from the Springfield Republican of Wednesday: An interesting liquor case was before the court yesterday afternoon, which shows again that the ways of some of the liquor sellers are past finding out. T. McArdle of Ware was arrested in August for illegal selling, and was committed by Justice Richards, but appealed. In the testimony before the superior court McArdle said that he had served four years in jail for selling liquor, and that when he got out he told his wife that he would have nothing more to do with the business. Since then his wife has sold liquor under a United States license. Detectives were employed by the selectmen of Ware to look up the case, and they testified to having bought liquor of the woman in the presence of her husband. The wife has left the State, and the defense was that she alone was responsible, but the instructions of Judge Dewey were clear that the husband was responsible for the acts of his wife, and the jury after being out but a few minutes brought in a verdict of guilty.

A pleasant innovation on the usual Christmas festivities has been introduced by the First Baptist church in Providence. Instead of having a festival for the Sunday school children, the officers collected the money for the entertainment, as usual, then apportioned it among the classes, and each class carried a supply of Christmas stores to some suffering family.

St. Peter's cathedral at Montreal, which has been in process of erection for some 10 years at a cost of several hundred thousand dollars, and would have been the largest church edifice on the continent, is to be razed to the ground and a small church erected, the Catholic church authorities having concluded that it is too great an undertaking.

Literary Notes.

A delightful feature of Scribner for this year is a series of sparkling novelettes, or condensed novels, instead of the usual long serial story. Mrs. Schayer's "Tiger-Lily," which was begun in November, ends in the January number. Mrs. Burnett's novelette, the story of an American girl in England, a sort of Daisy Miller, is to begin in the February Midwinter Number, with a twenty-two-page instalment, and will run through three issues. In May, "Madam Delphine," a story of life in New Orleans by George W. Cable, begins, and this will be followed by Boyesen's "Queen Titania," and Miss Osgood's "Toinette's Governor." The English publisher of Scribner telegraphs for seventeen thousand copies of the coming Midwinter (February) number, an advance of six thousand upon his orders for the same issue last year. The Midwinter Scribner will be, as usual with this issue, a number of especial interest and pictorial beauty.

The Score for December contains a review of its contents for the year; also some fine criticisms on concerts and the opera. The musical selections for the month are "Turnham Toll," a vocal piece by Wellings; "Marquis Marquise," by Morley; "Romeo and Juliette," a fantasie arranged by Clarke; "Chatelaine Valse," by Le Duc; "You'd Fain be Hearing," from Masked Ball; and the latest comic song of the day, "I'm Getting a Big Boy Now," as sung by Sol Smith, Russell and others; very popular. The above will be sent to any address upon receipt of ten cents. Stamps taken, ones and twos preferred. Published by J. F. Perry & Co., 13 West street, Boston.

Kisses.

"A hundred times a hundred more,
A thousand times a thousand yet,
More kisses thou to me must yield,
O dainty Laura! Thou must let Them number more than April shows
Of lily or of violet,
Or May of passion-hearted rose,
And more than all the sands that rise
When autumn whirlwinds cloud the skies."

"You ask me so much, so very much."
"Small is the boon I crave of thee."
"One kiss, then take it—is one enough?"
"Yes, give, oh give it now to me,
But let thy lips on mine cling thus
Till death shall so discover us."

From the Spanish.

THE MYSTERIOUS KNOT-HOLE.

A short time ago a few Cincinnatians were on a hunting trip in Indiana. One night they found it convenient to put up at a small country tavern, where the accommodations were somewhat limited, so much so as to compel them all to bunk in one moderate-sized room next to the roof. This being the best they could do, they accepted the conditions without much murmuring, being effectually tired out with their day's tramp, and after supper retired early.

About ten o' clock they were awakened out of sound slumber by the great gayety and laughter proceeding from the room adjoining, occupied by the landlord's three buxom daughters. It was evident that, as they were retiring for the night, they were having a high old frolic.

Now the hunters were all young men, and it was very tantalizing to have so much "gal" fun going on with only a door intervening. At length one of the hunters whispered to the others:

"See there, boys, there's a knot-hole in the door and we can see all that is going on. Heap of fun there, you bet."

They all looked, and there, sure enough, was what appeared to be a good sized knot-hole, showing the light within the room adjoining to be very bright indeed. A bold hunter crept cautiously out of bed and applied his eye to the knot-hole, but was astonished to find he could see nothing. As he put his head down to look the knot-hole seemed to disappear. Stepping back a pace or two, there was the knot-hole again.

"What did you see?" inquired one of the hunters, who was trembling with curiosity in the bed.

"Didn't see anything," was the reply. "They either took the knot-hole away or plugged it up."

Then another hunter tried it with like effect. As he stooped to take a glance at unconscious maidenhood on a frolic, the knot-hole vamosed. They were greatly puzzled, until one of them cried out:

"See there, boys; look at the roof!"

They looked, and the mystery was solved. There was a knot-hole in the board roofing, through which the moon was shining, the light falling upon the door so as to produce the illusion described. The hunters slept better after the discovery.

We have often heard Christians speak of going to religious meetings to "meet God there." We have often wondered if they thought He was on a journey. Our opinion is, that He only meets those who carry Him with them. He only meets those who are His constant companions. If He is not behind the counter, at the plough, and everywhere else, He is not likely to be felt at church. Possibly these may be strange notions of ours, but we are firm in that belief. We have no faith in a religion that "picks out motes" all the week, but groans and shouts on Sunday. We like the religion of the week better than that of Sunday.—Banner.

TRUTH IN A NUTSHELL.—The typefounders' art has been carried to such perfection as to enable the printer to successfully compete with the engraver; country printing offices, many of them at least, now equal the city establishments, and there exists no necessity for any one, where a live country printing office exists, to send abroad for anything in the printing line.—The Western Stationer and Printer.

A Swede wisely replied to an Englishman when he asked if it was not costly to take children off the streets and highways and place them in special schools, as is done in that land where illiteracy is almost unknown: "Yes, it is costly, but not dear. We Swedes are not rich enough to let a child grow up in ignorance, misery and crime, to become a scourge to society as well as a disgrace to himself."

Mons. de Lesseps read a paper some time ago before the French Academy, stating that he believed he had discovered the actual place where the Israelites crossed the Red Sea. A French priest, thinking his arguments conclusive, is appealing for funds for dredging purposes in order to bring to light any remains of Pharaoh's army which may be under the sand.

Girls, if there is one thing more than any other that holds young men of our day back from matrimonial ventures, it is the disheartening spectacle so often presented them of your own dear papa and mamma walking into church glorified respectively by a $12 ulster and a $30 bonnet. That is what scares the boys.—Burlington Hawkeye.

A small boy went to see his grandmother. After looking eagerly round the handsomely-furnished room where she sat, he exclaimed inquiringly, "Oh, grandma, where is the miserable table papa says you keep?"

NOT A BEVERAGE.—"They are not a beverage but a medicine, with curative properties of the highest degree, containing no poisonous drugs. They do not tear down an already debilitated system, but build it up. One bottle contains more hops, that is, more real hop strength, than a barrel of ordinary beer. Every druggist in Rochester sells them, and the physicians prescribe them."—Rochester Evening Express on Hop Bitters.

All the nourishment of malt liquors, without their objections, found in Malt Bitters.

They cure palpitation of the heart, nervousness, tremblings, nervous headache, leucorrhœa, pains in the back, and other forms of female weakness. Remember that Iron is one of the constituents of the blood, and is the great tonic. CARTER'S IRON PILLS are also valuable for men who are troubled with nervous weakness, night sweats, &c. Thousands have been cured. Try it and you will add one more to the number. Take it and health will once more gladden your heart.

Why bear such distress from constipation and piles?

Why so fearful because of disordered urine?

SHE MARRIED HIM.

Keziah Buckthorn had survived, by a considerable period, whatever of feminine charms and graces she might have once possessed, when a handsome fortune dropped down upon her as if from the clouds.

Had the riches come a score of years sooner, there is no telling what might have been. Keziah's attractions had never been, so to speak, dazzling. But twenty years have great potency in turning dimples into wrinkles, and lines of beauty into crows' feet; and many an adventurous Cœlebs, who might have found Miss Buckthorn a match not acceptable, with such a fortune, at twenty-five, passed her by at forty-five, saved from the sin of covetousness by the reflection that she and her money were inseparable conjuncts.

Even Topham Gynblaney, the daily problem of whose life was to keep adjusted the balance between a very moderate income and quite an expensive taste, and who looked upon a thrifty marriage as the goal of human wishes, after a few visits of reconnoissance to Keziah, which left him in no doubt that he had but to say the word to receive a gracious answer, left the word unspoken.

Mr. Gynblaney's visits had ceased for some weeks, when a message came one day that Miss Buckthorn was quite ill—and had fallen into a decline, in fact—and had been given up by Dr. Croke. She desired to see Mr. Gynblaney and such other friends as might wish to bid her farewell ere she started on that journey whence there is no return.

Of course there was no refusing such a request. Decorously clad in solemn black, and with a face put on to match, Topham Gynblaney presented himself at the invalid's door.

"How is she, doctor?" he inquired gravely, of a dried-up little man, who met him at the threshold with a countenance in which was a whole homily on the vanity of hope.

"Sinking rapidly," Dr. Croke replied; "those who wish to see her alive have no time to lose."

"There is no chance for her, then?"

"Not the slightest. Constitution gone—nervous system shattered—lungs collapsed—no recuperative force—no—"

"How long do you think she'll last?" interrupted Topham, anxiously.

"Eight-and-forty hours at the furthest; more likely less than half of it."

"Would you like to see her?" asked the doctor, at length.

"I called for that purpose," returned the other.

"Let me apprise her of your presence," said the doctor; "in her present state any sudden surprise might prove fatal."

After a brief absence the doctor returned.

"This way," he said, leading the visitor to the sick room.

Mr. Gynblaney was shocked at the spectacle that met him. His heart, we have hinted, was pretty tough; but tough as it was, it was touched at the sight of the pale, emaciated face—enough of itself to dispel all doubt of the truth of the doctor's predictions.

"This—is—very—kind—of—you, Top—Mr. Gynblaney, I mean," the sick lady murmured, a spasmodic cough interrupting her words.

Mr. Gynblaney took the chair placed for him at the bedside, and clasping in his own the thin hand extended to welcome him, returned the trembling pressure.

The doctor and the nurse retired to prepare a posset for the patient, leaving the latter and Mr. Gynblaney alone.

"I trust you will be better soon," said Mr. Gynblaney, with well-meant hypocrisy.

"That—is—past—hoping—for," was the scarcely audible answer. "Dr.—Croke—has—told—me—the—worst."

Dr. Croke, we may here remark, always told his patients the worst. If they got well the more credit to him. If they died, of course it wasn't his fault.

A sudden thought flashed upon Mr. Gynblaney. If he could only marry Miss Buckthorn now! In two days or less he would be a widower, and the lawful possessor of his wife's fortune. Here was an opportunity indeed!

Rubbing his eyes with his handkerchief till they watered and looked red from the force of the friction, he gave the hand in his another and more tender pressure.

"Dear Keziah," he whispered softly between his sobs, "how—how—cruel—that—we—sh—shonld be parted thus."

"I have long cherished the purpose," he went on hurriedly, mastering his emotion with an effort, "of asking you to be mine. Diffidence alone restrained me. But if you would even now consent—"

"Do—you—feel—that—it—would—be—a—comfort—to—you—Top—Topham—dea—"

The cough would not allow her to finish.

"It would!—it would!" he exclaimed, with a burst of well-feigned feeling. "To call you mine, but for an hour, though I lose you the next, would forever link my soul to a precious memory, which—which—"

Mr. Gynblaney was on the point of ending his flight in an inglorious flop-down, when Keziah came to the rescue.

"It—shall—be—as—you—please,—dear," she sighed.

"There is no time to be lost!" he cried, springing up. "Let us send for the minister at once!"

Just then the doctor and the nurse returned. The minister was summoned, and a few minutes sufficed to make Topham Gynblaney and Keziah Buckthorn one flesh.

A tinge which might have passed for a blush 20 years ago, overspread the bride's countenance. For some moments she was like one entranced with happiness.

"Toppy, dear," she said, when they were again alone, "I feel as if I could eat something; they've kept me on gruel till I'm nearly starved."

"What would you like, dearest?"

"Some tea and toast, and chops, and boiled eggs, and—"

"Good heavens!" exclaimed the doctor, entering in time to catch a portion of the list, "do you wish to commit suicide?"

"What hurt can it do?" she answered. "You have already told me there is no hope."

"I think we might as well gratify her," her husband added; and finding himself out-voted, the doctor held up his hand in horrified protest.

The repast was brought and received ample justice.

Next morning Mrs. Gynblaney was up betimes, packing her trunks for an elaborate wedding tour, from which her husband and the doctor tried in vain to dissuade her. It would be hard to tell which of them was the most astonished. Both were firmly convinced that the age of miracles was not yet past—unless, as the disconsolate Gynblaney half suspected, he had been the victim of a cunning plot.

Ten years have passed, and Topham Gynblaney has still the old problem to puzzle over; for Mrs. Gynblaney holds her own purse strings, and insists on "Toppy's" living on his own income.

WHAT TO TEACH OUR DAUGHTERS.

Teach them self-reliance.
Teach them to make bread.
Teach them to make shirts.
Teach them to foot up store bills.
Teach them not to wear false hair.
Teach them to wear thick, warm shoes.
Bring them up in the way they should go.
Teach them how to wash and iron clothes.
Teach them how to make their own dresses.
Teach them to cook a good meal of victuals
Teach them that a dollar is only a hundred cents.
Teach them how to darn stockings and sew on buttons.
Teach them every day, dry, hard, practical common sense.
Teach them to say No, and mean it; or Yes, and stick to it.
Teach them to wear calico dresses and do it like queens.
Give them a good, substantial common school education.
Teach them that a good, rosy romp is worth fifty consumptives.
Teach them to regard the morals and not the money of their beaux.
Teach them all the mysteries of the kitchen, the dining-room, and the parlor.
Teach them that the more one lives within his income the more he will save.
Teach them to have nothing to do with intemperate and dissolute young men.
Teach them that the further one lives beyond his income the nearer he gets to the poor-house.
Rely upon it that upon your teaching depends in a great measure the weal or woe of their after life.
Teach them that a good, steady mechanic is worth a dozen loafers in broadcloth.
Teach them the accomplishments, music, painting, drawing, if you have time and money to do it with.
Teach them that God made them in His own image, and no amount of tight-lacing will improve the model.—The Advance.

MIND WHAT YOU SAY.

It is always well to avoid saying everything that is improper, but is especially so before children. And here parents, as well as others, are often at fault. Children have as many ears as grown persons, and they are generally more attentive to what is said before them. What they hear they are very apt to repeat, and as they have not discretion and knowledge of the world enough to disguise anything, it is generally found that "children and fools speak the truth."

See that little boy's eyes glisten while you are speaking language you would not wish to have repeated. He does not fully understand what you mean, but he will remember every word; and it will be strange if he does not cause you to blush by its repetition.

A gentleman was in the habit of calling at a neighbor's house and the lady had always expressed to him great pleasure from his call. One day after she had expressed to him as usual her happiness from his visit, her little boy entered the room. The gentleman took him on his knee and asked, "Are you not glad to see me, George?"

"No, sir," replied the boy.

"Why not?" asked the gentleman.

"Because mother don't want you to come," said George.

"Indeed! how do you know that, George?"

Here the mother was crimson, and looked daggers at the little son. But he saw nothing and therefore replied, "Because she said yesterday that she wished that old bore would not call here again."

That was enough. The gentleman's hat was soon in requisition, and he left with the impression that "great is the truth and it will prevail."

Another child looked sharply in the face of a visitor, and being asked what she meant by it, replied:

"I wanted to see whether you had a drop in your eye; I heard mother say you had, frequently."

"Dear me," said Mrs. Watkins, on hearing of the death of her friend, Mrs. Tompkins, "I feel that I am very poorly prepared for eternity. I haven't a single dress fit to be laid out in." And she at once gave orders to the dressmaker for a new dress.

A young lawyer wished to cite an authority on a case he was conducting, and not being able to remember it, his opponent wittily remarked, "Though lost to cite, to memory dear."

AN EDITOR'S IDEA OF POETRY.

"If you please, sir," said the young lady, timidly, as the editor handed her a chair, "I have composed a few verses, or partially composed them, and I thought you might help me finish them and then print them. My ma says they are real nice as far as they go, and pa takes the Eagle every day."

She was a handsome creature, with beautiful blue eyes, and a crowning glory as yellow as golden rods. There was an expectant look on her face, a hopelessness that appealed to the holiest emotions, and the editor made up his mind not to crush the longing of that pure heart if he never struck another lick..

"May I show you the poetry?" continued the ripe, red mouth. "You will see that I couldn't get the last lines of the verses, and if you would please be so kind as to help me—"

Help her! Though he had never even read a line of poetry, the editor felt the spirit of the divine art flood his soul as he yielded to the bewildering music. Help her! Well, he should smile.

"The first verse runs like this," she said, taking courage from his eyes:

"How softly sweet the autumn air
The dying woodland fills,
And nature turns from restful care—"

"'To anti-bilious pills,'" added the editor, with a jerk. "Just the thing. It rhymes, and it's so. You take anybody, now. Half the people you meet are—"

"I suppose you know best," interrupted the young girl. "I hadn't thought of it in that way, but you have a better idea of such things. Now the second verse is more like this:"

"The dove-eyed kine upon the moor
Look tender, meek and sad;
While from the valley comes the roar—"

"'Of the matchless liver-pad!'" roared the editor. "There you get it. That finishes the second so as to match the first. It combines the fashions with poetry, and carries the idea right home to the fireside. If I only had your ability in starting a verse, with my genius in winding it up, I'd quit the shears and open the poetry business to-morrow."

"Think so?" asked the fair young lady. "It don't strike me as keeping up the theme."

"You don't want to. You want to break the theme here and there. The reader likes it better. O yes! Where you keep up the theme it gets monotonous."

"Perhaps that's so," rejoined the beauty, brightening up. "I didn't think of that. Now I'll read the third verse:"

"How sadly droops the dying day,
As night springs from the glen,
And moaning twilight seems to say—"

"'The old man's drunk again' wouldn't do, would it?" asked the editor. "Somebody else wrote that, and we might be accused of plagiarism. We must have this thing original. Suppose we say—now just suppose we say, 'Why did I spout my Ben?'"

"Is that new?" inquired the sweet, rosy lips. "At least I never heard of it before. I don't know what it means."

"New? 'Deed its new. Ben is the Presbyterian name for overcoat, and spout means to hock. 'Why did I spout my Ben?' means why did I shove my topper! That's just what twilight would think of first, you know. O, don't be afraid—that's just immense!"

"Well, I'll leave it to you," said the glorious girl, with a smile that pinned the editor's heart to his spine. "This is the fourth verse:"

"The merry milkmaid's sombre song
Re-echoes from the rocks,
As silently she trips along—"

"'With holes in both her socks,' by Jove!" cries the delighted editor. "You see—"

"Oh, no, no!" remonstrated the blushing maiden. "Not that."

"Certainly," protested the editor, warming up. "Nine on four she's got 'em; and you get fidelity to fact, with a wealth of poetical expression. The worst of poetry generally is you cannot state things as they are. It is not like prose. But here we have busted out all the established notions, and put up an actual existence with a veil of genuine poetry over it. I think that is the best idea we have struck yet."

"I don't seem to look at it as you do, but of course you are the best judge. Pa thought I ought to say:

"As silently she trips along
In autumn's yellow tracks."

Wouldn't that do?"

"Do! Just look at it! Does tracks rhyme with rocks? Not in the Brooklyn Eagle it don't. Besides, when you say 'tracks' and 'rocks' you give the impression of some fellow heaving things to another fellow who is scratching for safety. 'Socks,' on the other hand, rhymes with 'rocks,' and beautifies them, while it touches up the milkmaid, and, by describing her condition, shows her to be a child of the very nature you are showing up."

"I think you are right," said the sweet angel. "I'll tell pa where he was wrong. This is the way the fifth verse runs:"

"And, close behind, the farmer's boy
Trills forth his simple tunes,
And slips beside the maiden coy—"

"'And splits his pantaloons.' Done it myself; know just exactly how it is. Why, bless your heart, you—"

Snip, snip, snip. Paste, paste, paste. But it is with a saddened heart that he snips and pastes among his exchanges now. The beautiful vision that for a moment dawned upon him, has left but a recollection in his heart of one sunbeam in his life, quenched by the shower of tears with which she denounced him as a "nasty brute," and went out from him forever.—Brooklyn Eagle.

In his evening prayer, a little boy asked God to bless the poor children. Afterwards his mother said to him, "How will you help God to bless the poor?" He replied, "If I had a thousand cakes I would give them some after I had eaten all I wanted." "But you have not got a thousand cakes. What will you do?" said the mother. "I will give them some bread," he replied. "But the bread is mine, not yours," said she. "I will earn some money and buy some bread," he said. "You cannot do that, so what will you do with what you have now to help the poor? After thinking a moment, he replied, "I have seven cents, I will give four, will that do?" This was educating the child to give in the right way. A good old elder used to render thanks in prayer to God for every new opportunity to do good by giving to benevolent causes. This habit of giving grows by exercise.—Golden Rule.

While the very young daughter of a country clergyman was playing in the garden one day, a stranger came along and inquired if her father was at home. "No," she replied; "but my mother is in the house, and she will pray with you, you poor miserable sinner."

Give Him a Lift.

Give him a lift. Don't kneel in prayer,
Nor moralize with his despair;
The man is down, and his great need
Is ready help—not prayer and creed.

'Tis time when wounds are washed and healed,
That the inward motive be revealed,
But now, whate'er the spirit be,
Mere words are but a mockery.

One grain of aid just now is more
To him than tomes of saintly lore;
Pray—if you must—in your heart,
But give him a lift, give him a start.

The world is full of good advice,
Of prayer and praise and preaching nice;
But the generous souls who aid mankind
Are scarce as gold, and hard to find.

Give like a Christian—speak in deeds;
A noble life's the best of creeds;
And he shall wear a royal crown
Who gives them a lift when they are down!

LETTER FROM BOSTON.

Correspondence of the Journal.

BOSTON, JAN. 12th, 1881.

The Hub continues to revolve, and at last accounts the small remaining portion of the world was revolving with it. We have been having the most winter in a given space of time that we have seen for some years, and the streets are in just the condition which might be expected with a snow storm every two or three days. The horse cars keep their tracks open by scraping the snow up in ridges on each side, making the locomotion for teams mighty hard. When the weather is soft (to use an Irish expression) the slush is immeasurable. The men stoically take it as they find it, while the ladies, with their dresses raised to various heights, according to the modesty of the wearer, pick their way along on tip-toe, and wait at the crossings to be helped by the gallant policemen for which this city is noted. Boston has had a good holiday trade, and every one looks happy in consequence. The stores were "just splendid," and it was a pleasure to walk up Washington or Tremont street and feast the eyes on the many beautiful things displayed in the windows.

The shipments of grain, cattle and many other things to Europe is very large now, and the port is full of steamers. In crossing to East Boston a few days since I counted fourteen ocean steamers. It looked well, of course, but it would be an improvement in the eyes of a patriotic American if a few of them flew the stars and stripes, instead of the foreign flag they all carried. The harbor is full of floating ice, and there is some that does not float, as a vessel that has to hire two or three tug boats to break it out of dock knows to its sorrow.

There is always plenty to hear and see in Boston, if one has plenty of the "needful" to pay for it. The gospel is the only thing furnished without money and without price, and to get that on those terms one has to take a back seat near the door, where he is quite likely to take cold. In religion as in many other things "we Bostonians" have the advantage of out-lying districts. We can pay our money and take our choice, and are not obliged to have that unmentionable place we all hope to escape from dinned into our unwilling ears Sunday after Sunday in the one unchangeable way. Here, for those who like it, there is the real old-fashioned fire and brimstone article, and no discount for cash. Then you can grade up to a kind of medium, where it's not uncomfortably warm, and from that to a regular White Mountain establishment, where the departed sinner simply stops to cool off. The last is exclusively for summer travel, and at the present time of writing is to let. During the recent cold snap we took ours hot, and it was an actual pleasure while we were shivering to hear of a place that was warm, even if it was a little too warm.

Well, our law makers are again here, and the star spangled banner once more waves daily over the State House. The advantage the cities have over the towns is yearly exemplified. While the city districts send more or less the same men year after year, the country districts, made up of several towns, which always claim their "turn," rarely return the same man twice, and so lose much of the influence they might have with experienced men sent here several years in succession. I suppose this is too much to expect, as it would cut off so many of the brethren from the honor of being representative, and in after life from telling how they went to Boston and helped make laws. NIX.

HOME CONFECTIONERY.

It is perfectly natural, as everybody knows, for children to beg for lumps of sugar from the time when the baby first connects sugar with the bowl till years later when he is allowed to help himself. It is entirely legitimate that they should have in moderation the sweets they crave, and which in a large measure supply their bodies with needed heat. They enjoy wonderfully well having sweet things made at home, in whose making they can assist, and during holiday week it is not hard to indulge them and let them at least have molasses candy and popcorn balls. These balls are easily made by boiling some molasses until it will harden in cold water, then pour it over the popcorn, take it into a cool room, butter your hands and roll the corn into the proper shape. It is a simple matter also to make chocolate caramels; all that is needed is one cup of sweet milk, one cup of molasses, half a cup of sugar, half a cup of grated chocolate, a piece of butter the size of a walnut; stir constantly and let it boil until it is thick, then turn it out on to buttered plates; when it begins to stiffen mark it in squares, so that it will break readily when cold. Cocoanut caramels are made of two cups of grated cocoanut, one cup of sugar, two tablespoonfuls of flour, the whites of three eggs beaten stiff; bake on a buttered paper in a quick oven. Nice white candy is easily made: Take one quart of granulated sugar, one pint of water, two tablespoonfuls of vinegar, boil just as you do molasses candy, but do not stir it; you can tell when it is done by trying it in cold water. Pull it as if it were molasses candy; have a dish near by with some vanilla in it, and work in enough to flavor it as you pull; put it in a cold room, and the next day you will have delicious candy.

Kissing a girl on the cheek is like eating the skin of an orange and throwing the juicy pulp away.

Maiden lady's quotation: "Where singleness is bliss, 'tis folly to be wives."

SUNLIGHT.

The sun, if you will only open your house to him, is a faithful physician, who will be pretty constant in attendance, and who will send in no bills. Many years ago glass was something of a luxury, but now we can all have good-sized windows and plenty of them, at moderate cost, and there is no excuse for making loop-holes through which the sun can cast but half an eye, and from which one can gain only narrow glimpses of the beautiful outer world. I am sufficiently acquainted with the conservative character of many country people, to know that expressions of disdain will come from some quarters when I mention bay windows. Nevertheless bay windows are a good thing. Their effect is very much like letting heaven into one's house; at least it ought to be like that, for it is nothing but absurdity and wickedness to darken such windows with shutters or heavy curtains until only a struggling ray of sunlight can be seen.

If bay windows are too expensive, a very desirable substitute can be had by placing two ordinary-sized windows side by side, with a wide, capacious ledge at the bottom for seats or for plants. A room with a window like this cannot fail to be cheery, and its effect in a simple cottage house is quite sumptuous. There is likewise in its favor the fact that it is less exposed than the deep bay window to outer heat and cold. In a kitchen or in a child's bedroom, or in an attic where the walls are low, two half windows, set side by side and made to slide or to open on hinges, admit a broad, generous light, and give an apartment a pretty and pleasing rustic air. Let the builder endeavor to have all rooms in daily use, especially bedrooms and sitting-rooms, well lighted by the sun. "To sleep on unsunned beds in unsunned chambers, and to work day after day in unsunned rooms, is the unrepented sin of half the nation," vigorously affirms a prominent writer.

But this should not be said of that part of the nation living in the country, far from those towering brick walls whose steps take hold on basement kitchens, and in whose depressing shadows many lives must necessarily be spent. In the country, with a whole sky to draw from, let there be light! If any rooms in the house must look solely to the north for illumination, let them be the parlor and the spare chamber. People who come and go can be cheerful for a while in a north-windowed apartment, but the constant dwellers in a house need its sunniest rooms.—Farm Homes.

JAMAICA RUM FROM OLD SHOES.

A New York correspondent of the Springfield Union writes: The superintendent of the Brooklyn census was much puzzled some weeks ago upon discovering that there was some use made of old shoes, which was not known to any of the deputies in his employ, and could not be discovered. It was found that old shoes were collected in large quantities by rag-pickers and junkmen, and sold to certain mysterious persons, for what purpose no one could divine. It was well known that Prussian blue is made of old leather, but the persons who were engaged in that business were perfectly willing to have their works inspected. After much inquiry and investigation it was found that the old shoes were made into Jamaica rum. When they came from the rag-pickers the good pieces were cut out and sold to small cobblers for patching purposes. The rest were distilled with spirits, colored with burnt sugar, and sold as Jamaica rum, and the most singular fact about the business is that it is bought, not by saloon-keepers, but by druggists, who pride themselves upon the purity of their articles. Many industries were found in which, though the value of the product was considerable, no value was attributed to the raw material. One man who made tomato catsup acknowledged to making $18,000 worth of catsup every year, but said that his raw material cost nothing. When pressed for an explanation he said that every year in the fall he sent to the factories where tomatoes are canned, for tubs into which the peelings and trimmings of the tomatoes were thrown by the men who prepared them for canning. This material he got for the trouble of carrying it away. He ground it up, flavored it, and sold it as catsup to the extent of $18,000 a year.

TRYING HER SPEED.

"Stranger," said the stage-driver, "this was how I found out her speed: I was driving alongside the railroad track just as a big load of hotel furniture started. The freight car wouldn't hold it all, but they managed to squeeze everything in except a long bar mirror, which they tied to the side of the car. The mare saw her reflection in the glass, and thought it was another horse spurting for the lead. You couldn't have held her back with a steam windlass. She just laid back her ears and snorted along like a twenty-inch shell.

The passengers all began to get excited. They rushed out on the platform and began to make bets. The conductor stood up on a seat and began to sell pools. The engineer pulled the throttle-valve wide open, and tore along at ninety-five miles an hour. Soon the mare was abreast of the cow-catcher. At San Bruno we had half a mile the lead. Near the Six-mile House the train was so much ahead of time that it fell through an open draw and everlastingly smashed up—72 killed and 199 wounded. It was pretty rough on the passengers, but then we distanced the train, bet yer life. About a month after I sold that mare to her present owner for $60,000.

We talk of one hundred thousand drunkards dying annually, but have we any just conception of what that means? Did you ever stand and watch the passing regiments on some great day of parade, and did you not tire as you stood seeing the apparently never ending ranks of the military as they marched? yet it is not probable that twenty thousand ever passed before you. Suppose these one hundred thousand poor drunkards should pass in procession before you on their way to the grave—what a strange, sad sight!—Hon. W. E. Dodge.

A Galveston darkey has returned from a business trip through the interior of the state very much disgusted. "Did you receive any offers to pick cotton?" asked a friend. "Yis, sich as dey was. A man offered one-third ob de amount I picked, and when I looked at de field I saw for myself that when it was all picked it wouldn't amount to one-third, so I left for home." "You was in luck that he didn't fool yer." "You bet I was, Sandy. My refmetic was all what sabed me. I tell yer, send yer chillen to school."

The Journal.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 15, 1881.

GEN. GRANT was on Thursday elected president of the New York world's fair commission, and has accepted the office.

THE State directors of the Boston & Albany Railroad think that the interests of the Hub require that either the president or vice president of the road shall live in Boston.

SECRETARY SCHURZ'S treatment of the Poncas seems to be thoroughly vindicated by the commission sent by the President to investigate their condition. They are contented where they are, and only ask to be paid for the lands from which they were removed.

SENATOR LOGAN has introduced a bill in the United States Senate placing Gen. Grant on the retired list, with the rank and pay of General, and authorizing the President to call on him in any emergency. There is no probability that the bill will receive favorable consideration by the present Congress.

THE Legislature will vote for United States Senator next Tuesday, in each branch, and on Wednesday will vote in joint convention. Senator Dawes will be re-elected without any material opposition. The Legislature has hardly got into working order yet, but things will soon be running smoothly, and petitions are pouring in at a rate which will give the members enough to do for some time.

GOV. PILLSBURY of Minnesota in his message to the Legislature sharply condemns the State for its course in repudiating the $2,275,000 of railroad bonds issued in 1858. These bonds will mature the coming year, and he urges the Legislature to redeem the State's honor by making provision for their payment. The State is able, and ought to be anxious, to remove this blot from its reputation.

THE House at Washington on Wednesday voted in favor of a 3 per cent bond for funding purposes, by a majority of 40, and as if this were not a low enough rate, some of the Democrats want to make the bonds subject to taxation, while they are generally in favor of making them redeemable at an early day. It is the opinion of the best financiers that a 3 per cent bond cannot be floated at par, especially a short-time bond, and the Senate will probably raise the rate to 3½ per cent.

SECRETARY SHERMAN has been unanimously nominated for United States Senator by the Republicans in the Ohio Legislature, and Gen. Joseph R. Hawley of Connecticut and Gen. Benjamin Harrison of Indiana have been similarly nominated in their States. The Nevada Legislature has elected James G. Fair, of "Bonanza" fame, to succeed Senator Sharon, while California sends Gen. John F. Miller to the Senate. The New York Republicans have nominated Thomas C. Platt.

IT does not seem to have occurred to anybody to suggest the name of ex-Gov. Jewell of Connecticut for a cabinet position under President Garfield. And yet, as head of the national committee which successfully engineered the recent campaign, he will probably be considered as entitled to some consideration. Perhaps this "bob-tailed clam Yankee" will be reinstated at the head of the post office department, from which he was so unceremoniously removed by Grant, and for which he has excellent qualifications.

THE headquarters of our present Legislature seem to be at the United States Hotel in Boston, over which ex-Councilor Tilly Haynes presides with all his old-time suavity and grace, intensified, doubtless, by his long residence in the classic shades of the modern Athens. He seems to fully understand how to "scoop 'em in," for some 40 members from this part of the State stop there, and we don't know how many more from other portions of the commonwealth. What a chance for lobbying there would be, if Tilly were addicted to such sinful practices!

THE colored people are clamoring for a man of their complexion in President Garfield's cabinet. We presume they might be gratified if they would produce a man of sufficient caliber, but the idea of placing a man there simply because he is black, is foolish in the extreme. Gen. Garfield addressed a delegation of colored men from Alabama Tuesday evening, telling them that the education of their children was the foremost duty of the American people, and urging them to avoid raising the color line and separating themselves from the mass of citizens.

GOV. MURRAY of Utah has raised a big breeze by refusing to give Delegate Cannon a certificate of election to Congress, and awarding the place to A. G. Campbell, his Gentile opponent. The Governor did this on the grounds that Cannon was a polygamist, in defiance of the law making polygamy a felony, and that he had not been naturalized, and was therefore ineligible. Cannon will of course contest the seat, and Congress will have an opportunity to show whether it will stand by its own laws, or will continue to sanction their violation and display its own weakness in handling this evil.

ALEXANDER HYDE, representative in the Legislature from Lee, and a brother of William Hyde of Ware, fell on the walk as he was leaving the state house Tuesday afternoon, and died in a few moments from heart disease. Mr. Hyde was born in Lee Sept. 25, 1814, and had always lived there. He graduated at Williams College at the age of 20, and was soon called back to the old homestead by the death of his father. He was a valued citizen and a skillful and scientific farmer and fruit grower, and his contributions to the press on agricultural subjects found a wide circle of readers and were greatly prized. Mr. Hyde had held several local offices, and was at one time editor of the Lee Gleaner, and his loss will be deeply felt in the community where he was so well known and universally respected.

THE consolidation of Jay Gould's new American Union telegraph company with the Western Union is announced. The details are not given, though it is reported that the new concern will have a capital of $80,000,000, that the title of Western Union telepraph company will be retained, and that the shares of the old companies are to be merged in the new company at about 129 for Western Union, 133⅓ for American Union, and 66⅔ for Atlantic and Pacific, which has been practically owned by the Western Union for some time. This is a big stock-watering job, and the public will doubtless have to suffer for it in increased rates, while Vanderbilt and Gould pocket immense profits by it.

THE committee of the Maine Legislature on the gubernatorial vote reported on Tuesday in favor of seating H. M. Plaisted, the Fusion candidate, who received a plurality of the votes cast at the last election. It requires considerable self denial on the part of the Republicans to do this, as they were confident of the election of their own candidate under the plurality amendment to the constitution, for which they worked assiduously, and but for which they could now elect him in the Legislature. But it is the only straightforward course open to them, and if they are hoist by their own petard they must patiently grin and bear it. Gov. Plaisted was inaugurated on Thursday.

Last Sunday morning, just before time for service, the Baptist church was discovered to be on fire, having taken from the furnace pipe. Had it not been for the water in the baptistery, which had just been filled for use in the evening, most likely the church and several other buildings would have been burned, as it would have been almost impossible to get water from outside in time to have saved it. As it was a few pails full extinguished the flames, and $50 will cover the loss.

One woman was killed and several persons injured Friday week, by the derailing of a passenger train on the Passumpsic Railroad near Coventry, Vt.

A Chicago woman broke a kerosene lamp, while drunk, and the blazing oil ran over her. A man undertook to put out the flames, but she furiously fought him off, declaring that the fire felt good, and that it should not be extinguished. She was burned to death.

Prince Hannibal, an old negro who was the son of an African king, and who had been a slave and a slaveholder, died from the extreme cold near Warrenton, Va., Friday week.

Thirteen persons were burned to death near Dover, N. H., last week Friday night, by the burning of the Strafford County almshouse. There were 169 persons in the building, some of whom were locked in their rooms, and the doors leading to the fire escape were also locked. The pecuniary loss was $70,000.

A farm-house near Gaithersburg, Md., was burned Tuesday night, and a man and two boys perished in the flames.

A dozen or more persons were injured by the ditching of a Wabash passenger car at Mitchell, Ill., Wednesday morning.

Hatch Walsh, of Peterboro, N. H., murdered his wife Wednesday night and then took his own life.

Three men and three horses were killed by the explosion of a boiler at Detroit on Wednesday.

An explosion of chemicals at Newburyport Wednesday afternoon destroyed $10,000 worth of property, killed two men and seriously burned a third.

The house and barn of a wealthy German farmer living near Oskosh, Wis., were burned Wednesday night, and the remains of the man, his wife and daughter, all of whom had been murdered, were found in the ruins.

Mrs. George Richards of New London, Ct., was found dead on the floor of her house Thursday, burned to a crisp, She is supposed to have fallen on the stove during a fit.

The little Longmore boy of Pembroke, Me., who recently killed a playmate, eight years old, was on Thursday found guilty of manslaughter.

In another column will be found the prospectus of the Christian Union, a weekly paper of 24 pages, and doubtless known to most of our readers. The special features for the coming year must be very interesting, particularly the series of papers upon "Faith and Skepticism," and "Church Music." Mrs. Beecher's "Home Talks" are too well known to need commendation, while the large array of popular writers who contribute to the paper will furnish good reading for all tastes as in the past. A good newspaper, religious and intellectual, it should be well patronized.

A bill has been introduced in Congress reducing the rates charged for postal money orders, making the charge for an order of $5 or less five cents, for an order over $5 and not exceeding $10 eight cents, and so on. Most people will risk $2 or $3 in a letter rather than pay the present rate of ten cents for an order of that amount, but would prefer the order if they could get it for five cents. The government, as well as the people, would doubtless be benefited by the proposed change.

In asking aid from Congress for building a ship railway across the Isthmus of Tehuantepec, Capt. Eads proposes to agree to demonstrate the superiority of the railway over a canal, by building terminal works and 10 miles of road at one end at his own expense, and running ships over it, before any guaranty will be binding on the part of the United States.

During the year 1880 the United States produced 475,000,000 bushels of wheat, 1,500,000,000 bushels of corn, 413,000,000 bushels of oats, 24,000,000 bushels of rye, 40,000,000 bushels of barley and 6,000,000 bales of cotton. Our country ranks third omong the commercial nations of the globe.

A locomotive employed on the track across the ice on the St. Lawrence jumped the track the other day, broke through the ice and went to the bottom of the river. The engineer and fireman had a narrow escape.

The Meriden House at Meriden, Ct., was partly burned early Wednesday morning, by the breaking of a lamp in the hands of a drunken porter. Loss $40,000.

The United States tax on matches is several times greater than the first cost of the matches themselves, and an attempt is being made to secure its repeal.

An entire family at West Hartford, Ct., is suffering from trichina, caused by eating pork from a hog of their own raising.

Distressing water famines are reported from various parts of the country, owing to the long continued drouth. At Orange, N. J., nearly every well is dry, farmers drive their cattle miles for drink, manufacturers buy water at $2 aload for their boilers, and families buy from street sprinklers for drinking and cooking. At Galesbury, Ill., the C. B. & Q. R. R. paid $500 one day last week for ice to melt, to obtain water for its engines, and manufacturers and families take the same method of obtaining water for their use. The long continued cold has frozen up what little water there was.

Several people have been frozen to death at Paris, Va., a village of 500 people on the side of the Blue Ridge mountains, which was almost completely buried in a snow storm of five days' duration which began Dec. 20th. The people had to tunnel through the drifts to get out of their houses, and owing to the scarcity of food and fuel they were crowded into a few houses; and a committee took charge of all the wood and provisions in the place. A relief party succeeded in reaching the place last week Friday, with food and medicine.

Monday's storm of snow, sleet and rain extended all over New England, and was the severest storm of the season in portions of Vermont, New Hampshire and Maine. On the Sound the drifting ice made navigation almost impossible. Considerable damage was done in Virginia by freshets.

The Democrats have a brilliant plan for gaining six United States Senators, by dividing Texas into four States.

Literary Notes.

"Experiences of Samuel Bowles in Spirit Life; or Life as he now sees it from a Spiritual Standpoint," is the title of a little pamphlet written by Carrie E. S. Twing of Westfield, N. Y., and published by the Star Publishing Co. of Springfield. It is so wholly unlike anything Mr. Bowles's vigorous mind would have produced while here, that it is enough to make his body turn in its coffin, to think that such weak, senseless stuff should be given to the public as his sentiments. But people can judge for themselves of its merits, as the book is for sale by the newsdealers.

A timely interest is given, by the death of the author, to the new edition of her masterpiece, "Romola," just issued by the American Book Exchange, New York. It shows her work at its best and strongest, and at the same time gives the reader the opportunity to acquire a lasting familiarity with the scenes and society of mediæval Italy. It is issued in handy and beautiful form, extra cloth binding, simple but rare elegance and taste in design, and like the other issues of the "Literary Revolution" its cost is almost nominal, viz: 35 cents. It is one of a series intended to form a library of classic fiction, which will include one representative and characteristic work of each of the great authors who have won lasting fame in the realm of fiction. Among those issued or nearly ready are: Scott's "Ivanhoe," Bulwer's "Pompeii," Irving's "Knickerbocker," Cooper's "Mohicans," "Tom Brown at Rugby," "Adventures of Don Quixote," and "Uarda, a Romance of Ancient Egypt." Full catalogue of standard publications will be sent on request by the American Book Exchange, Tribune Building, New York.

Suicide is not more sinful than neglecting a cough. For only 25c. you can buy a bottle of Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup and be saved from death.

No purer, safer, more unobjectionable stimulant in medicine than Malt Bitters.

J. S. Webber of Holyoke has just bought of C. N. Stimpson an elegant Knabe grand square piano, which challenges comparison with any instrument in the city.

The tone of the Smith American Organs has always been admired. This is owing partly to the extreme care in tuning and voicing the reeds, partly to the perfectness of the mechanism, and partly to the symmetry and solidity of the cases. Sold by Stimpson & Co., Springfield, the one price house.

Forbes & Wallace, Springfield, have opened 20,000 pieces of Hamburg edging and insertions, their entire Spring and Summer importations of the latest and choicest designs made especially for them in St. Goul, Switzerland. Being direct importers, they can assure their numerous customers that their prices, as well as the large selections of styles, cannot be excelled by any house in the country.

Ladies should visit Smith & Murray's, Springfield, great sale of dress goods this month. They are closing out $25,000 worth of dress goods at less than half price. Go to Springfield and you will save money every time.

Itching Piles—Symptoms and Cure.

The symptoms are moisture, like perspiration, intense itching, increased by scratching, very distressing, particularly at night, as if pin worms were crawling in and about the rectum; the private parts are sometimes affected; if allowed to continue very serious results may follow. Alone in the World.

Twas Christmas Eve, and an old maid crept sadly and lonely off to bed; But ere she closed her eyes and slept, A curious fancy entered her head.

And she smiled, then blushed, and said "Pooh! pooh!" Then took her stocking with proper care, And as half ashamed, yet hoping, too, Hung it up by the chimney there.

"This is Christmas Eve," she said; "Others get presents, mayhap I can; Who knows but Santa Claus may be led To put in my stocking"—she blushed—"a man." —Derrick.

CHINESE WOMEN'S FEET.

An American missionary, Miss Norwood, of Swatow, recently described how the size of the foot is reduced in Chinese women. The binding of the feet is not begun till the child learns to walk. The bandages are specially manufactured, and are about two inches wide and two yards long for the first year, five yards long for subsequent years. The end of the strip is laid on the inside of the foot at the instep, then carried over the toes, under the foot, and round the heel, the toes being thus drawn toward and over the sole, while a bulge is produced on the instep, and a deep indentation in the sole. Successive layers of bandages are used till the strip is all used, and the end is then sewn tightly down. The foot is so squeezed upward that, in walking, only the ball of the great toe touches the ground. After a month the foot is put in hot water to soak some time; then the bandage is carefully unwound, much dead cuticle coming off with it. Frequently, too, one or two toes may even drop off, in which case the woman feels afterward repaid by having smaller and more delicate feet. Each time the bandage is taken off, the foot is kneaded to make the joints more flexible, and is then bound up again as quickly as possible with a fresh bandage, which is drawn up more tightly. During the first year the pain is so intense that the sufferer can do nothing, and for about two years the foot aches continually, and is the seat of a pain which is like the pricking of sharp needles. With continued rigorous binding the foot in two years becomes dead and ceases to ache, and the whole leg, from the knee downward, becomes shrunk, so as to be little more than skin and bone. When once formed, the "golden lily," as the Chinese lady calls her delicate little foot, can never recover its original shape.

Mr. J. W. Bennington, R. N., writes: "It is an error to suppose, as many do, that it is only the upper ten among the daughters of China that indulge in the luxury of 'golden lilies,' as it is extremely common among every class, even to the very poorest—notably the poor sewing women one sees in every Chinese city and town, who can barely manage to hobble from house to house seeking work. The pain endured while under the operation is so severe and continuous that the poor girls never sleep for long periods without the aid of strong narcotics, and then only but fitfully; and it is from this constant suffering that the peculiar sullen or stolid look so often seen on the woman's face is derived. The origin of this custom is involved in mystery to the Westerns. Some say that the strong-minded among the ladies wanted to interfere in politics, and that there is a general liking for visiting, chattering, and gossip (and China women can chatter and gossip), both and all of which inclinations their lords desired, and desire, to stop by crippling them."

DON'T PRAY AT PEOPLE.—Scolding isn't praying, and it never does less good than when it is foisted into a prayer, and the scolded think you are telling the Lord that about them which you do not dare to say to their faces. Don't talk with the Lord as you would chat with your neighbor. True prayer is reverent. Don't ramble all over the universe; you'll not get back in time. Don't try to get everything into one prayer; you will most likely have another chance. Don't pray so long as to tire out all the hearers; that isn't the meaning of the commands to "pray always," and to "pray without ceasing;" and you can safely leave some petitions to be offered when alone in your closet. Don't pray in public if you are prayerless in secret; such prayer prevails neither with God nor man. Pray "in the Holy Ghost."—Congregationalist.

Mrs. Cunningham, a woman of 102 years, living at Mallet-Scheuech, eight miles south of Glasgow, is the only living person that has seen the poet Burns. Her father occupied a neighboring farm when Burns and his brother Gilbert owned Mossgiel, and she repeatedly saw and heard the poet cracking jokes with her elder sister, for whom he had a passing fancy. To this day the good old woman "canna understan' what the folk mak sic a wark aboot Burns for—a lowse, thriftless fallow and faint o' the dram." Mrs. Cunningham is still hale in mind and voice.

"Have you seen my daughter's baby?" inquired a fond grandmother of a friend. "Oh, yes—but it is so small, so very small," was the reply. "This was to be expected, for you know, don't you, that she was attended by a homœopathic doctor?" replied G. M. with a toss of her head.

Levi Calkings of Vernon, Wis., wished to marry a second wife one month after the death of his first, but no clergyman nor justice would perform the ceremony, so Mr. Calkings read the service himself in presence of witnesses.

One often owes his glory to the dullness of those who surround him, as the glow-worm only shines at night.

NOT A BEVERAGE.—"They are not a beverage but a medicine, with curative properties of the highest degree, containing no poisonous drugs. They do not tear down an already debilitated system, but build it up. One bottle contains more hops, that is, more real hop strength, than a barrel of ordinary beer. Every druggist in Rochester sells them, and the physicians prescribe them."—Rochester Evening Express on Hop Bitters.

Vitalizing, nourishing and stimulating, without intoxicating, are Malt Bitters.

The SUN for 1881.

Everybody reads THE SUN. In the editions of this newspaper throughout the year to come everybody will find:

I. All the world's news, so presented that the reader will get the greatest amount of information with the least unprofitable expenditure of time and eyesight. THE SUN long ago discovered the golden mean between redundant fulness and unsatisfactory brevity.

II. Much of that sort of news which depends less upon its recognized importance than upon its interest to mankind. From morning to morning THE SUN prints a continued story of the lives of real men and women, and of their deeds, plans, loves, hates, and troubles. This story is more varied and more interesting than any romance that was ever devised.

III. Good writing in every column, and freshness, originality, accuracy, and decorum in the treatment of every subject.

IV. Honest comment. THE SUN'S habit is to speak out fearlessly about men and things.

V. Equal candor in dealing with each political party, and equal readiness to commend what is praiseworthy or to rebuke what is blamable in Democrat or Republican.

VI. Absolute independence of partisan organizations, but unwavering loyalty to true Democratic principles. THE SUN believes that the Government which the Constitution gives us is a good one to keep. Its notion of duty is to resist to its utmost power the efforts of men in the Republican party to set up another form of government in place of that which exists. The year 1881 and the years immediately following will probably decide this supremely important contest. THE SUN believes that the victory will be with the people as against the Rings for monopoly, the Rings for plunder, and the Rings for imperial power.

Our terms are as follows:

For the Daily SUN, a four-page sheet of twenty-eight columns, the price by mail, post-paid, is 55 cents a month, or $6.50 a year; or, including the Sunday paper, an eight-page sheet of 56 columns, the price is 65 cents a month, or $7.70 a year, postage paid.

The Sunday edition of THE SUN is also furnished separately at $1.20 a year, postage paid.

The price of the WEEKLY SUN, eight pages, fifty-six columns, is $1 a year, postage paid. For clubs of ten sending $10 we will send an extra copy free. Address I. W. ENGLAND,

The Weather.

"So they talked of the weather, that fruitful theme to people of few ideas."

"Talked of the weather?" and why not?
Since very well we know
We've more of that to talk about
Than all things else below;
It's always with us, day and night,
And take the year together,
No outward force so oft controls
Our actions, as the weather.

It thrusts itself upon our plans
For pleasure, or for gain;
Enthusiasm shrinks and fades
Beneath a drizzling rain;
The railway cars, which "wait for none,"
Oft find themselves belated,
Because the weather had the track,
And so, behold! they waited.

Upon the weather must depend
Our lecture, walk or sail;
We find beneath its stern behest
There's such a word as fail.
In short, we needs must speak of it,
For, take it all together,
There's none, save Death, but soon or late
Must wait upon the weather.

Monson, Mass. H. F. BLISS.

A LITTLE MISTAKE.

Miss Minerva Blair, spinster, on the shady side of forty, and her niece, Miss Marion Alexander, also single, but on the sunny side of twenty, sat in the pleasant sitting-room of a pleasant country house, listening to the rumble of the afternoon railway train, which was just arriving at the station.

"Mr. Harvey will be here in a few minutes, Marion," said her aunt, "and you must be cordial with him, unless you wish to offend me."

"I wish the train had had a collision!" was the rather vindictive reply, though a sly half-smile showed that the words were hardly meant.

"Marion!" cried the other, somewhat sternly. "You are positively sinful to be so malicious. Why should you hate a gentleman you have never seen?"

"I might in turn ask why I should love this gentleman I have never seen?"

"Nobody asks you to love him."

"No. But you wish me to marry him."

"Well," apologized the aunt, "I would like to see you as well settled as you certainly would be with Walter Harvey. The love can come afterwards. I know you will like him."

"Why, Aunt Minerva, you have never met him yet yourself!"

"Not since he was a little boy. But I have always known his parents, and they are worthy people."

"So were Marion Alexander's, I think," poutingly said the young lady. "And yet you see what a perverse scapegrace you have for a niece."

Even Miss Minerva's grim features had to relax a little. But any further conversation was cut off by a ring at the front door.

"He has come," said Miss Blair. "You must at least treat him civilly, Marion."

"Indeed I will, aunty, for your sake," said the girl, with a touch of good feeling.

Miss Minerva went herself to the visitor in the hall.

"Mr. Harvey," she said to the dark-bearded, handsome young man whom the servant admitted, "it gives me a genuine pleasure to welcome you to this house. I have known your family so many years that you almost seem a friend."

"Indeed, I hope to be one," was the frank reply.

"You must let me send my niece to you," said Miss Minerva, as soon as the new-comer was fairly seated. "I am housekeeper, you know, and cannot neglect my duties, and you will have a substitute whom you must learn to like."

A slender, rustling figure was half pushed into the room, where it stood bowing with a semi-haughty air. Something like a smile was upon the young man's countenance, and he kept his eyes fastened upon the girl's face; but she did not look up, waiting in silence for him to speak. But he, too, seemed wordless, and only gave vent to an embarrassed "Ahem!"

Miss Blair wondered a little, and frowned a little at her niece's behavior. But she wisely resolved to leave them together.

As soon as she was fairly gone, "Marion!" cried the young man.

The girl raised her eyes at once.

"Arthur, is it you? I—I did not expect you. I thought it was your cousin Walter who was coming."

"It would require a long discourse to explain all, my Marion," he answered. "And I almost fear your aunt may overhear us."

His arm went about her waist.

"We will stroll into the garden, Arthur. There we can talk without danger of being overheard."

So they walked out into the pleasant grounds, and over the greensward, to the roots of a great oak tree, where they found cozy seats.

"Have you ever told your aunt about me, Marion?"

"I could not, Arthur. She has been so wedded to the idea of my marrying the son of her early friend, General Harvey, that any opposition would have made her unhappy. So I have left the matter to time. But you have not yet told me how you come to be here."

"It is not so wondrous strange. My cousin Walter and myself are excellent good friends; and as he happens to have an attachment of his own, he is just as adverse to being forced into a marriage with a stranger as yourself. I discovered all this in the course of a conversation I had with him; and then I told him the story of our meeting, and our present relations. The revelation came just in time. His father was even then urging a visit here upon him. Nothing was easier for me than to take his place and let Walter undertake a more welcome jaunt."

"And now that you are here, sir, what can you do?"

"Upon my soul!" cried the young man, somewhat ruefully, "I hardly know. I must try and ingratiate myself with your aunt, and leave the rest to luck."

A long talk was followed by a long stroll; and thus nearly two hours elapsed before they returned to the house. Aunt Minerva beamed upon them a most approving glance at what she deemed the success of her plans; but she startled them the next morning by saying:

"I have just had a note from the General, your father, Mr. Harvey. He will be with us himself, to-morrow morning."

Poor Arthur tried hard to conceal the consternation which this intelligence threw him into. Fortunately Miss Minerva was in too complacent a humor to be very observing.

"Come, Marion, you shall read the note. It might make Mr. Harvey too vain, or I would give him a peep also."

Miss Marion, in another room, read General Harvey's billet, which ran as follows:

"If my son Walter, usually so dutiful, should disappoint me in our plan, I shall feel inclined to adopt my nephew, Arthur Harvey, who is a splendid young fellow, and would, probably, do more to oblige me, as he has not been spoiled by indulgence. I suppose my gentleman will have arrived before you get this. I have taken a sudden notion that he may require looking after; and, as I have owed you a visit, I will pay my debt by following this note to-morrow morning. Sincerely your friend, JOHN HARVEY."

"I suppose," said Marion, slyly, though she felt in no humorous mood, "if you couldn't get the son, auntie, you would not object to the nephew, as it would be all in the family?"

"Well," replied the aunt, after a moment's thought, "I don't know how that might have been if I hadn't seen Walter Harvey. But I feel now that no other young man could replace him. Besides, Marion, I don't think he will be so unwilling."

Poor Marion could only hang her head and blush like a guilty thing.

"What shall I do, Marion?" cried Arthur, when she tripped back into the parlor. "I feel inclined to run away instanter."

"That would be so brave!" was the rather sarcastic rejoinder.

"Please, then, advise, or rather, command me."

"Well, then, sir, hear your orders. This deceit makes me feel mean and guilty in spite of myself, and we must have an explanation at all hazards."

"Now?"

Marion reflected a moment.

"No, not now—in the morning. You must face your uncle, and then let the truth come out."

"And then won't there be a storm!" the young man said.

"Well, we have raised it, and we must meet it," Miss Marion replied, bravely. "And now let us dismiss the subject for to-day."

But although they did their best to be happy, a nervousness about the coming exposure hung over them, and they were much too restless for comfort that evening and the next morning.

It was ten o'clock before the train from town arrived, and two weary hours passed after breakfast before the expected visitor arrived at the house.

He was received at the door by Miss Minerva, while Marion and her lover remained in the sitting-room. Arthur made a virtue of necessity, and advanced to greet his uncle with as much heartiness and innocence as he could possibly throw into his manner.

"Why, Arthur!" cried the General, "this is rather a surprise. What could have brought you here?"

But he gave his nephew a warm shake of the hand.

"Arthur!" cried the aunt—"Arthur! I thought your son's name was Walter, General Harvey."

"So it is, Miss Minerva—so it is! But this young man happens to be my nephew."

"Good gracious!" gasped Miss Blair, sinking back into a chair.

General Harvey began to comprehend that something was wrong.

"See here, Arthur!" he cried sternly, "have you been playing a trick? Why are you here, instead of my son, whom I sent?"

"Dear uncle, Walter would not come, for he is not heart free; and he and I both knew that you wanted Marion in the family; and as Walter was not eligible, we thought—that is I—he—"

Here he broke down ignominiously. There was a blank, ominous silence. Marion stole to Miss Minerva's side.

"Auntie," she said, "you must forgive Arthur and me. We are such old friends. Besides," she added, demurely, "you said if you couldn't have General Harvey's son, you would prefer his nephew."

General Harvey's and Miss Blair's glances met, and something like a smile passed over their faces.

"I see how it is," said he. "We have been fighting nature, which is a bit of a mistake. I fancy we had better rectify it."

And they did so.

SHE CURED HIM.—An amusing incident is recalled of Kate Chase Sprague, over which her father used to laugh when he touched upon his daughter's traits. On the occasion of a large party Mrs. Sprague sent for her coachman and told him what duties she expected of him, either to open the door or assist in the cloak room. The coachman demurred, and impudently answered that he was hired to drive the horses, and not to help in the house. "Very well, said my Lady Katherine, "have my carriage at the door at eight o'clock." At 8 the carriage drove up. "Blanket the horses and wait till I send further word," was sent out to the liveried magnifico on the box. From 8 of a chill Winter evening until 2 of a colder morning, coachee sat with stiffened arms on his box, and when the last guest had gone his orders came to drive to the stable. A madder man never held a rein than the darky on the box, but a meeker one never begged the madam to retain him, and expiated his offence by the most perfect obedience forever after.—Washington Letter.

Curtis Andrews and his wife have lived together for sixty years in Caroline County, Md., and have never quarreled. When asked for the secret of their domestic happiness, the old man replied; "Well, I have always noticed that there is more trouble between man and wife over making the fire in the morning than anything else. If they can get along smoothly about that everything else is smooth. My wife and I went to housekeeping together in our log cabin nigh fifty years ago. We've only got one fireplace, but that's a big one. When we moved in I said to her, 'Sally, I'll make the fire, and I'll 'tend to it.' I made that fire, and it's been burning ever since. For nigh fifty years I've covered that fire before going to bed, and I've fixed it up in the morning. I've never had any matches in the house, and there are never any sulphur smells in the household. While that fire burns there is peace in Curtis Andrews' home."

He was a weary, worn out old farmer. He had been "hawking" about his wagon load of produce all day long and came into a newspaper office with the remark: "I'm going to advertise my stuff and tell anybody who wants it they can drop me a postal card, and I'll deliver it. I can't stand this sort of thing any longer." He tried it a week and found that he had a better class of customers, sold in large quantities and only used up about a quarter as much time. He believes in judicious advertising.

TURNING THE TABLES.

When Maine was a district of Massachusetts, Ezekiel Whitman was chosen to represent the district in the Massachusetts Legislature. He was an eccentric man, and one of the best lawyers of his time. He owned a farm and did much work on his land, and when the time came for him to set out for Boston his best suit of clothes was a suit of homespun. His wife objected to his going in this garb, but he did not care.

"I will get a nice suit made as soon as I reach Boston," he said.

Reaching his destination, Whitman found rest at Doolittle's City Tavern. Let it be understood that he was a graduate of Harvard, and at this tavern he was at home. As he entered the parlor of the house he found several ladies and gentlemen assembled, and he heard the following remarks from one of them:

"Ah! here comes a countryman of the real homespun genius. Here's fun."

Whitman stared at the company and then sat down.

"Say, my friend, are you from the country?" remarked one of the gentlemen.

"Ya-as," answered Ezekiel, with a ludicrous twist of the face.

"And what do you think of our city?" asked one of the ladies.

"It's a pooty thickly-settled place, anyhow. It's got a sweepin' sight of housen in it."

"And a great many people, too."

"Ya-as, I should guess so."

"Many people where you come from?"

"Wal, some."

"Plenty of ladies, I suppose?"

"Ya-as, a fair sprinkling."

"And I don't doubt you are quite a beau among them."

"Ya-as, beau 'em home, tew meeting and singing-skewl."

"Perhaps the gentleman from the country will take a glass of wine?"

"Thank'ee. Don't care if I do."

The wine was brought.

"You must drink a toast."

"Oh, git eout! I eat toast; never heard of sich a thing as drinkin' it. But I can give you a sentiment."

The ladies clapped their hands; but what was their surprise when the stranger, rising, spoke calmly and clearly as follows:

"Ladies and gentlemen, permit me to wish you health and happiness, with every blessing earth can afford, and may you grow better and wiser in advancing years, bearing ever in mind that outward appearances are deceitful. You mistook me from my dress as a country booby, while I from the same superficial cause thought you were ladies and gentlemen. The mistake has been mutual."

He had just finished when Caleb Strong, Governor of the State, entered and inquired for Whitman.

"Ah, here I am, Governor. Glad to see you."

Then turning to the dumbfounded company, he said:

"I wish you a very good evening."

CHILDREN'S QUAINT SAYINGS.

The London Truth recently offered a prize of $10 for the quaintest saying of a child. Several hundred contributions were sent in, of which the following are a few of the most pointed:

As we were talking one day about churches and their various ceremonies, a little boy remarked that he had seen a christening, a funeral and a wedding, but he had never seen a divorce.

Jack (aged four years, taking a walk): "What becomes of people when they die?" Mamma: "They turn into dust, dear." Jack: "What a lot of people there must be on this road, then."

Tottie: "I wonder why dolls are always girls, Tom?" Tom: "Because boys hate being made babies of."

A child seeing a bill on a telegraph post: "Oh, mamma, look! A message has fallen down."

A precocious boy of six years, listening wearily to a long-winded tale related by a prosy relative, took advantage of a short pause to say slyly: "I wish that story had been brought out in numbers."

"Little baby is very ill, Charlie; I am afraid he will die." "Well, if he does die, mamma, he won't go to the bad place," "Why, Charlie, how do you know that?" "Oh, I know he can't, mamma; he's got no teeth to gnash."

Little boy learning his catechism from his mother. Q.—"What is man's chief end?" A.—"His head."

Girl (yawning over lessons): "I'm so tired; I should like to go to sleep." Boy: "I'll tell you what to do, then. Get up early to-morrow and have a good sleep before breakfast."

Mamma: "And David was able to kill that great big man Goliath, because God helped him." Harry (aged six): "Well, I don't call that fair, mamma; that's two on one."

A little girl had a penny given her to drop in the contribution box at church. When she dropped in the coin, she exclaimed: "That's the way the money goes, pop goes the weasel!"

Small boy, watching his sister iron a piece of work with a bird's nest of eggs done in crewels on it: "I say, sister, if you keep the iron so long on those eggs, you'll hatch 'em!"

A little girl, seeing two love-birds billing and cooing, was told they were making love. "Why don't they marry?" she asked; "then they would not make love any more."

A fond mother said to her little son: "Tommy, my dear, I am going to give you a little companion soon; which would you prefer, a little boy, or a little girl?" "Well, mother," replied Tommy, "If it is all the same to you, I would rather have a little donkey."

A little girl, aged five years, going to bed one night, and kneeling down to say her prayers, said: "Oh, mamma, may I only say amen to-night? I'm so tired."

A watchmaker at Copenhagen is reported to have made a watch which requires no winding up, inasmuch as it performs that work itself by means of an electric current. An electric magnet fixed inside the watch keeps the spring perpetually in a state of tension. All that is required to keep the watch going is to preserve the battery in proper working order, for which purpose one or two inspections in a twelvemonth are said to be sufficient.

Mamma (on discovering that little Nonny had purloined a ball from the Bazaar): "Don't you know, Nonny, it is very naughty to take what is not your own?" Nonny: "Yes, mamma." Mamma: "Why did you take that ball, then?" Nonny: "Because I couldn't reach a dolly."

Gingerbread.

Breathes there a man with soul so dead
He loves not new baked gingerbread?
Who, stepping through the kitchen door,
On baking day sees goodly store
Of fragrant, umber-shadowed cake,
And—half unconscious—does not break
A ragged chunk? Ah! toothsome bliss!
He is a churl who thinks not this.
For him no practiced dexter wrist
Shall limp incipient doughnuts twist,
Or stir, to coax his gourmand taste,
Dreamy meringue and flaky paste.
Though he may live on Nob Hill's tip
And hold his gold with miser's grip;
Though he may own the whole long list
Of vinter's hoard by cobwebs kissed;
May dine from Sevres, drive a "cart,"
And sit on "decorative art;"
Despite his gastronomic books,
Despite his white-capped Gallic cooks,
The wretch, concentred in his pride,
Shall live and eat—unsatisfied.
And when kind Providence, or gout,
Shall snuff his farthing rushlight out,
The stern recorder of the skies
Against the tombstone's gilded lies
(Counting the virtues of the dead)
Shall write: "He loved not gingerbread!"

HIS SECOND CHOICE.

Hester!" exclaimed Aunt Susan, ceasing her rocking and knitting, and sitting upright, "Do you know what your husband will do when you are dead?"

"What do you mean?" was the startled reply.

"He will go and marry the sweetest tempered girl he can find."

"O auntie!" Hester began.

"Don't interrupt me till I have finished," said Aunt Susan, leaning back and taking up her knitting. "She may not be as pretty as you are, but she will be good natured. She may not be as bright as you are, but she will be good natured. She may not be as good a housekeeper as you are, in fact I think she will not, but she will be good natured. She may not even love him as well as you do, but she will be more good natured."

"Why, auntie"—

"That isn't all," continued Aunt Susan. "Every day you live you are making your husband more and more in love with that good-natured woman who may take your place some day. After Mr. and Mrs. Harrison left you the other evening, the only remark he made about them was, 'She is a sweet woman.'"

"Ah, auntie"—

"That isn't all," composedly resumed Aunt Susan. "To-day your husband was half across the kitchen floor bringing you the first ripe peaches, and all you did was to look up and say, 'There, Will, just see your muddy tracks on my clean floor. I won't have my clean floor all tracked up.' Some men would have thrown the peaches out of the window. One day you screwed up your face when he kissed you, because his mustache was damp, and said, 'I never want you to kiss me again.' When he empties anything you tell him not to spill it; when he lifts anything you tell him not to break it. From morning till night your sharp voice is heard complaining and fault-finding. And last winter, when you were so sick, you scolded him for allowing the pump to freeze, and took no notice when he said, 'I was so anxious about you that I could not think of the pump.'"

"But, auntie"—

"Hearken, child. The strongest, most intellectual men of them all care more for a woman's tenderness than for anything else in this world, and without this, the cleverest woman and the most perfect housekeeper is sure to lose her husband's affection in time. There may be a few more men like your Will, as gentle, as loving, and chivalrous, as forgetful of self, and so satisfied with loving that their affection will die a long struggling death; but in most cases it takes but a few years of fretfulness and fault-finding to turn a husband's love into irritated indifference."

"Well, auntie"—

"Yes, well! You are not dead yet, and that sweet-tempered woman has not been found; so you have time to become so serene and sweet that your husband can never imagine that there is a better tempered woman in existence."—Advocate and Guardian.

A NEW PHILOSOPHY.

An eccentric Berlin philosopher announces that he has discovered a way to make a trip around the world in twenty-four hours. He says that he is informed by the captains of ships that birds are seen at sea a thousand miles or more from land, and pronounces it self-evident that they must reach shore in a very short time, since they cannot find a resting place in mid-ocean. From this he conceived the idea that they merely raise themselves aloft, and, with only enough motion to keep afloat, remain as nearly stationary as possible while the earth revolves around under them. All they then have to do is to wait until the desired spot on the earth's surface comes along, and thereupon comfortably to lower themselves to solid ground. This ingenious practice on the part of birds the Berlin man proposes to imitate for mankind with the assistance of a balloon and passenger car of peculiar construction that he has invented, which will soar aloft and remain stationary, while the restless earth rolls on below. It does not appear that he has successfully tried a trip with his balloon himself, but he has laid his theory before the Polytechnic Society of Berlin, and given an elaborate exposition of it. The society received it apparently with levity, but the inventor is in dead earnest.

It is difficult for any one to understand how a woman can be happy whose sealskin sacque has been lengthened by sewing on it a piece of fur. She knows that her sacque is short, and everybody knows it is short, and she knows that everybody knows it, and everybody knows that she knows that everybody knows it, and she knows that everybody knows that she knows that everybody knows it, and everybody knows that she knows that everybody knows that she knows that everybody knows that she knows it.—Puck.

The latest and most reliable German authorities fix the present population of the world at 1,456,000,000. Of these Europe (without Iceland and Nova Zembla) has 315,029,000, or 1791 inhabitants to the square mile; Asia, 834,907,000, or 1031 to every square mile; Africa, 205,679,000, or 378 to a square mile; America, 95,495,000, or 137 to a square mile; Australia and Polynesia, 4,031,000, or 24 to a square mile. The Polar region has, it is estimated, 82,000 inhabitants.

Dr. X., who has been in the habit of visiting Mme. A. three times a week as medical adviser, was rather taken aback the other day by the servant who answered the bell saying: "Mme. A. will be unable to see you to-day, doctor, because she is sick."

GYMNASTICS AND THE BATH.

A physician writes as follows to the New York Times:

For years past I have been convinced that the mania for gymnastic exercises, athletic development and muscular power, has been productive of a vast deal of harm. Years ago the theory in vogue for gaining health was dieting, and hundreds of people dieted themselves into insanity or the grave. Now the mania is for exercise, and hundreds of young men (although it may seem to be a ridiculous statement) and young women also, are killing themselves by "exercise."

Nature rebels at "knotted" muscles, and requires the full payment of a serious penalty whenever the folly is perpetrated of developing muscle as a business, through the swing of dumb-bells and Indian clubs. The long walks which are taken too frequently and with quite too much vim, under the influence of a spirit of emulation or to win a bet, are productive of far more injury than benefit. But, most of all, I wanted to call attention to the idea of daily bathing. The poor body is literally scrubbed out of existence. Nature guards her outposts very jealously, but she cannot do double duty in one direction without signal failure in some other.

Consequently, when the surface of the body is daily denuded of the cuticle under the vigorous application of the barbarous "coarse towel," she must repair damages at the expense of the digestion, or the natural eliminations of morbid matter; some organ loses the harmony with its fellows which is necessary to a perfect whole. Cleanliness is not only "next to godliness," but a very large part of it, and it is highly important that bathing should be employed as a hygienic force, but not the shower-bath when an exhausted body is slowly waking from an unnatural sleep; nor a cold sponge when the day's duties have exhausted mind and body both.

To change the clothing frequently, and permit a thorough airing, to expose the entire surface of the body for a few moments to the air of the room on rising and retiring, a light brushing with a soft brush or a fine towel, and a good bath once or twice a week, are all that an American can endure and retain health. Light exercise of those muscles not called into play in the daily routine is also desirable, but it should be calisthenic, not gymnastic, and should not include a vigorous pounding of the chest, than which nothing can be worse for the lungs.

The exercise which a light heart and clear conscience will require of a man or woman will generally be found to answer all the needs of good health. If the system is enervated by excesses and deranged by the use of stimulants, the will may be needed to rouse the body to motion. If over-work has caused the relaxation, surely our wisest teacher is nature, when she draws the poor body irresistibly to the couch and beneficently closes the weary eyes to the infatuation of dumb-bells and the paraphernalia of the Indian-club man.

Enter Jones the magnificent, with stranger. "A little surprise for you, Mrs. J.! Let me introduce Mr. Wiggins, whom I have persuaded to take his chance, and come and try pot-luck with us; and I hope you won't starve him, hey, my love?" Mrs. Jones (curtesying): "There's no fear of that, Mr. Wiggins. I got my husband's telegram in time!"

Col. W. F. Elkin, the last but one of the "long nine," headed by Abraham Lincoln, in the Illinois Legislature in 1839-40, has died in Decatur. Ninian W. Edwards of Springfield alone survives. The aggregate height of the "long nine" was precisely fifty-four feet. They secured the removal of the capital from Vandalia to Springfield.

"See here," said a fault-finding husband to his wife, "we must have things arranged in this house so that we shall know just where everything is kept." "With all my heart," she sweetly answered, "and let us begin with your late hours, my love; I should dearly like to know where they are kept." He lets things run on as usual.

"Annie," said a fond husband to his wife, "what were the current expenses for last month?" "Oh," she answered, "only 28 cents." "Why, how was that?" "Well, you see I only baked cake twice, and therefore used very few currants."

"Is it true, Harry, that you have broken off with Markaway's daughter?" "Alas, yes! I was forced to, although she is a charming woman." "Why?" "Incompatibility of complexion. She does not suit my furniture."

Vennor stepped out on the cold oil-cloth at midnight in search of some insect powder, a few nights since, and the next morning he telegraphed all over the country, "we shall have a severe winter."

"Father," asked a young man who will vote two years hence, "what is civil service reform?" "Getting the other fellow's man out of office and getting your own in," replied the well-posted father.

A wife desired her husband to buy her a new bonnet. "Why, my dear," said he, "how can I do it when I have no money?" and she simply exclaimed, "Owe, dear!"

Keep your promise to the letter, be prompt and exact, and it will save you much trouble and care through life, and win for you the respect and trust of your friends.

"My serment shall stand on dese three pints," said a colored preacher not many Sundays ago; "1, the expoundin'; 2, the enlargin'; 3, the arousin'."

We have just read a handkerchief flirtation code, and advise all men desiring to avoid breach of promise suits to wipe their mouths on their coat tails.

Somebody says that a fashionable Boston banquet consists of two beans stuck on a hair-pin, readings by Emerson and talks by Alcott.

Goodness consists not in the outward things we do, but in the inward things we are. To be is the great thing.

The Journal.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 22, 1881.

SITKA is making a bid for increased population, by reporting that large quantities of rich gold-bearing quartz are to be found near the coast.

THE House at Washington passed the 3 per cent funding bill on Wednesday by a majority of only 10. The Senate will undoubtedly increase the rate of interest, and remove some of the objectionable features of the bill.

WE are a growing country, and no mistake. The completed census returns show that the population of the States is 49,369,595, and of the Territories 783,271, making a total of 50,-152,866. This is a gain in the last ten years of 11,596,883, or more than 30 per cent.

AFTER a precarious existence of about four years, the "permanent" exhibition at Philadelphia, which has struggled to preserve something of the glory of the departed centennial for the Quaker City, is about to go by the board. It is not self-supporting, and the directors recommend that it be closed and the building sold.

THE Hampden county commissioners say the law punishing drunkenness with a $1 fine has cost the county nearly $12,000 the past year, and has also increased the number of drunkards. This accords with the experience in other parts of the State, and the Legislature will without doubt restore the old rate, or something near it.

SENATOR CONKLING congratulated the New York Republicans on the choice of Mr. Platt as his colleague, because he "never apologized for being a stalwart Republican." Conkling seems to have a high ideal of the qualifications requisite for the position. It is generally considered that Mr. Platt will primarily represent Mr. Conkling, and secondarily New York.

ANENT the selection of Garfield's cabinet, it is said that Senator Conkling has been asked to name the secretary of the navy or war, or the attorney general, but declined in high dudgeon, because he could not say who should be secretary of the treasury. If the first part of the story is true, the latter part is doubtless so, for the secretary of the treasury has an immense patronage, which is what Conkling wants.

SECRETARY SHERMAN was elected United States Senator on Tuesday by the Ohio Legislature. The Maine Legislature elected Eugene Hale, Connecticut Gen. Hawley, New York Thomas C. Platt and Michigan Congressman Conger. Senator Bayard was re-elected in Delaware, Senator McMillan in Minnesota and Senator Cockrell in Missouri, while Indiana sends Gen. Benj. Harrison. The Pennsylvania Legislature has made no choice yet.

THE Massachusetts Democrats have now about all walked into Gen. Butler's parlor like good little flies, and are ready to be swallowed by him at his pleasure. He was nominated for United States Senator by the Democrats of the Legislature on Monday, receiving 25 votes to 2 each for Geo. M. Stearns and Geo. H. French, and one apiece for Josiah G. Abbott and other "swallow-tails." Of course there was no chance of his election, but his nomination shows the drift of the party. Butler in the United States Senate would be a veritable bull in a china shop.

OUR railroad commissioners are one of the most practical and able boards in the State. There is no foolishness about them, but when a subject is brought before them they take hold of it with a healthy vigor, look into it with a clear perception of every point involved, and render their decisions with a promptness and directness which is truly refreshing. In the case of the passengers on the Fitchburg road who were turned out of a Wagner car at Fitchburg, when they had paid for its use to Boston, the commissioners hold the road liable for breaking its contract, and talk to the managers sharply for allowing the Wagner company to do such a thing.

THE Legislature is receiving numerous petitions asking for a stiffening up of the divorce laws, and something ought to be done at this session which will lessen this growing evil. Numerous remonstrances are also coming in against biennial elections. A bill exempting $50 in wages from the trustee process was defeated in the House Monday after a lively debate. The committee on taxation has been listening to some forcible talk on the subject of taxation of mortgages, the opponents of the present law showing very clearly how unjustly it works. One man put the case in a nutshell by saying that the argument in favor of double taxation seemed to be: "If a man owes nothing, give him one tax; if he owes as much as he owns, give him double."

SENATOR DAWES was re-elected by the Legislature on Tuesday, receiving 34 votes in the Senate and 163 in the House, while three votes were cast for Butler in the Senate, and in the House Butler had 41 votes, John D. Long 23, and Horace Gray, H. L. Pierce and Charles Theodore Russell 1 each. Some of the Republicans rebelled at the calling of a caucus the other day to consider the senatorship question, and it finally adjourned without action. This was taken as somewhat unfavorable to Mr. Dawes' interests, though not endangering his election, and when it came to a vote the members wisely voted to return the man who has in twenty-four years of service at Washington shown himself a pure and able man, faithfully representing his State, and conscientiously working for the best interests of the whole country.

The New Apportionment.

Representative Cox of New York introduced his new apportionment bill in the House at Washington on Monday, which fixes the number of representatives at 301, an increase of 8 over the present number. Massachusetts retains her present number of members, but New England loses three, and also the Middle States, while the Western States gain eight and the Southern six. The apportionment among the States is as follows:

Alabama	8	Mississippi	7
Arkansas	5	Missouri	13
California	5	Nebraska	3
Colorado	1	Nevada	1
Connecticut	4	New Hampshire	2
Delaware	1	New Jersey	7
Florida	1	New York	31
Georgia	9	North Carolina	8
Illinois	19	Ohio	19
Indiana	12	Oregon	1
Iowa	10	Pennsylvania	26
Kansas	6	Rhode Island	2
Kentucky	10	South Carolina	6
Louisiana	6	Tennessee	9
Maine	4	Texas	10
Massachusetts	11	Virginia	9
Maryland	6	Vermont	2
Michigan	10	West Virginia	4
Minnesota	5	Wisconsin	8

Compared with the present number of members this bill makes the following losses and gains: Arkansas, California, Iowa, Michigan, Mississippi, South Carolina and West Virginia gain 1 each; Kansas gains 3, Texas 4, Minnesota and Nebraska 2 each; Pennsylvania, Ohio, New Hampshire, Maine, Indiana, Tennessee, Florida and Vermont lose 1 each, and New York loses 2.

DURING the year 1880 there were 4735 failures in the United States, with liabilities of $65,752,000, against 6658 failures in 1879 with liabilities of $98,140,000. The increasing prosperity of the country is shown by the fact that in 1876 every 69th man in business failed, in 1877 every 73d, in 1878 every 64th, in 1879 every 108th, and in 1880 every 158th. In New England there was one failure to every 118 in business, one to every 161 in the Middle States, one to every 131 in the South, one to every 235 in the West, one to every 72 in the Pacific States, and one in every 63 in Canada.

OUR Connecticut river fishermen are rejoicing over the unanimous vote of the legislative committee on fisheries to repeal all laws relative to taking shad and alewives in the river, except those relating to the Holyoke fishway. If the law passes, our fishermen will clean out the shad from the river, as in no other way do they seem likely to bring the Connecticut fishermen to an observance of the law in that State, to which they have paid no sort of attention.

ENGLAND has had a terrible snow storm this week, and on Wednesday the streets of London were completely blocked and traffic suspended, railroad trains were drifted in and abandoned, and there were many casualties along the coast, with loss of life. The Thames also rose to a great height, and flooded the houses of Parliament, hundreds of other houses also being flooded and abandoned. The damage by the storm is estimated at $10,000,000.

JUSTICE SWAYNE of the United States Supreme Court has resigned, to take effect on Monday. Stanley Matthews is mentioned as his probable successor.

GEN. GRANT arrived at Albany Monday from New York, and was received by Governor Cornell and a military escort.

The bullion production of the United States for the year 1880 amounted to $80,167,936, an increase of $5,000,000 over 1879. The product was divided as follows: gold, $33,-522,182; silver, $40,005,364; lead, $5,742,-390; copper, $898,000. The production in Colorado was $21,284,989; California, $18,-225,000; Nevada, $15,031,621; Utah, $6,450,-953; Arizona and Dakota a little over $4,000,000 each. The stock of gold and silver in the country Dec. 31st is estimated at $650,543,682, of which $486,683,049 is gold and the balance silver.

The mining village of Alta, in the Wahsatch mountains, Utah, has been nearly destroyed by terrible snow-slides from the surrounding mountains. Many lives have been lost, and nearly everybody has now left the place. There have been immense snow-falls, and eight miles of the Upper Big Cottonwood river are said to be one huge slide, covering everything.

Senator Dawes, who is a member of the civil service reform committee of the Senate, thinks that nothing can be done from legistion on the subject until a more active public sentiment is aroused. He says the legislative stream cannot rise higher than the fountain-head, the people.

A Buffalo funeral party which recently started for the cemetery in a blinding snow storm got lost, and found themselves a mile from land on the treacherous ice of Lake Erie. They succeeded in reaching the shore safely, and deferred the burial until another day.

The managers of the Fall River line of steamers have contracted for a new iron boat, which will have two distinct hulls, with about 100 compartments, and is designed to be absolutely fire-proof and non-sinkable. It is to be furnished throughout with electric lights.

A letter from Nashville, Tenn., says that the widow of President Polk is so beloved and respected that, by common consent of all parties, the interest on her little fortune in Tennessee State bonds, all she has, is exempted from repudiation.

W. H. Clark of Newberry, S. C., formerly of this place, has lost $800 recently by the robbery of a jewelry store in which he had an interest. Mr. Clark reports extremely cold weather in that section, the thermometer having been down to 20 degrees below zero, which is low enough to freeze the marrow bones out of the "sunny South."

With road beds frozen solid, and rails full of frost, this is the season when railroading is not unalloyed fun. The use of steel rails has largely removed the danger of accidents from broken rails, but still there is more liability to accident at this season than in warm weather, and engineers do not care to run any faster than they are obliged to.

Do any of our licensed liquor dealers sell to boys, in violation of their licenses? One or two boys were to be seen on the street the other day so drunk they could not walk straight, and it is to be presumed that they bought their liquor somewhere here. Does anybody know whether our dealers are living up to the conditions of their licenses or not?

The new "automatic shading pen" produces some really fine effects with the same effort only that is required for the plainest writing. It seems to be just what is wanted by bookkeepers, clerks and other penmen, who can by its use produce effects that have heretofore only been attained by experts. Circulars and sample lettering can be obtained by addressing the general agent, B. W. Child, 64 Federal street, Boston.

The friends of Mr. and Mrs. Louis B. Colburn, who moved from this place to Gloversville, N. Y., something over a year ago, will be glad to see from our birth notices that they are prospering in their new home. A West Brookfield correspondent sends in the following item: Mr. James Brennan, at the close of a course of instruction in West Brookfield, gave a concert in the Congregational church Jan. 13th, with a chorus of one hundred voices, ably assisted by Misses Smith of Boston and Nelson of Palmer, and the Messrs. Anderson of Ware, as soloists. It was eminently satisfactory. The singing by Miss Nelson called forth the most generous and hearty applause, and she will always be welcome to a West Brookfield audience, as she has won many friends here.

At the adjourned meeting of the trustees of the Palmer Savings Bank on Monday the resignation of S. W. French, who was last week elected treasurer of the bank, was accepted, and W. C. Dewey was unanimously elected to the position. Mr. Dewey has been in the bank for nearly four years past, and is well qualified for the place to which he has been elected. The trustees also voted a small salary to the president, J. B. Shaw, who will take a more active part in the affairs of the bank than heretofore, looking after its interests, and assisting in its work when necessary.

There is almost a coal famine, in consequence of the long continued and unusually severe cold weather, and much difficulty is experienced by dealers in obtaining enough to fill their orders. J. F. Holbrook has a cargo frozen in somewhere on the Sound, it is supposed, which he has not heard from for a month. There is so much ice in the Sound that sailing vessels can make no headway, and the only way of getting coal through is by barges towed by tugs. Water freights have gone up 35 cents, and the price here has been advanced 25 cents a ton, accordingly, but it is hoped that no further advance will be necessary.

Meetings have been held at the Congregational church this week on Tuesday afternoon and last (Friday) evening, and at the Baptist church on Wednesday evening and Thursday afternoon, conducted by Rev. O. L. Leonard, the evangelist. A delegation of about seventy-five came down from Three Rivers Wednesday evening, including many young converts, and a number were expected to be down again last evening. This afternoon Mr. Leonard will have a children's meeting at the Congregational church, and next Wednesday evening he will relate his experiences in Ireland. He will also conduct several revival meetings during next week, but we are not able to announce them definitely. The necessary announcements will be made on Sunday.

The first farmers' institute of the season at Weeks Hall Tuesday called out a large attendance, about a hundred farmers being present, and much interest developed. The essay of Mr. Warner of Hardwick, on "The dairy cow; how to get her and how to keep her," was listened to with interest, and the subject was further discussed by Dr. H. P. Wakefield, W. R. Sessions, W. M. Tucker, E. B. Gates, George Moores and others. The prevailing opinion seems to be that the Jersey cow is the best for butter, the Ayrshires for quality of milk for use, and the Holsteins for quantity of milk. Landlord Weeks furnished dinner for 60 of the farmers. At the next institute, to be held the third Tuesday in February, the subject of corn and forage crops will be discussed.

The M. E. society gave an oyster supper, with tableaux, etc., in Murdock's Hall, Thursday evening.

It is proposed to have a big sleigh-ride of married people next Wednesday afternoon, and all such in Thorndike and vicinity who would like to go, are requested to report to Capt. Clark, at the post office.

A party of six young couples had a sleigh-ride to Belchertown Thursday evening, returning in season to finish up with an oyster supper at the hall. It was their first sleigh-ride, and of course they had a glorious time.

On Tuesday morning Rev. Father McKenney of Bondville drove to this place to take the 7.30 train. His driver started to return, when the horse became frightened at a hand-car on the track, and bolted, throwing out the driver. The horse then ran up the railroad track and was struck by the engine of the incoming train, and instantly killed. The sleigh was badly broken. The horse was valued at $150.

Since the advent of good sleighing the Brimfield Hotel has been thronged with sleigh-riders, and has been the scene of almost constant festivity. First came on Tuesday evening of last week forty couples from Fiskdale and Wales, and on Thursday evening forty-seven couples came from Southbridge. This week on Monday evening fifty couples came from Warren, Tuesday thirty couples from Ware, and on Thursday another large company came from Southbridge. The hotel has an elegant dancing hall, and is in every way adapted to the entertainment of parties. It is understood that the proprietor, Mr. Munroe, has entertained all these large parties to their entire satisfaction.

A party of 12 French couples from Indian Orchard had a sleigh ride to this place Thursday evening.

A fire in the mule room of the Palmer Mill Tuesday forenoon caused considerable alarm among the operatives for a few minutes, but did no serious damage, being extinguished before it had made much headway.

The religious meetings in this place have continued with increasing power this week, and their influence is felt throughout the place. Christians of all denominations have united to help on the work of the Lord, and the village has not seen such an awakening for nearly forty years. At every meeting the presence and power of the Spirit have been manifest, and in answer to earnest prayers many more unbelievers have been led to rejoice in the Lord. Several heads of families are among the converts, who now number nearly fifty, and still the good work goes on. Rev. O. L. Leonard, the evangelist, is expected to close his labors here this week, and his departure will be a source of genuine regret to all the people, who have become deeply attached to him, feeling that to his wise direction, earnestness and strong faith, is due in large measure the blessing which has come to the community.

WILBRAHAM.

There were 36 births, 30 marriages and 23 deaths in this town in 1880.

Rev. Mr. Waite of Granby preached at the Congregational church last Sabbath morning.

The senior class of Wesleyan Academy held a reception in Club Hall Saturday evening.

The Farmers' Club met at the house of M. F. Beebe Monday evening. The discussion on grasses was opened by C. A. Corbin and D. Havens. The next meeting will be at F. E. Clark's, Monday evening, Jan 31st.

A sleigh-ride party went from this place to Somers last Friday evening, and one from the academy to Palmer on Saturday evening. On Thursday Miss Mamie Robbins' school enjoyed a ride to Springfield, and two parties from Springfield took supper at the Allis House this week, one on Monday and one on Tuesday evening.

The farmers' institute of Hampden county met at the Allis House on Wednesday. The subject of the morning session was "Grasses," and H. M. Sessions of Hampden exhibited some fine specimens, which he described in an interesting paper on the subject. At half past twelve the institute adjourned for dinner, and in the afternoon the discussion of the subject of the morning was continued, being opened by a fine essay by Mr. Morgan of Greenwich, who had a choice collection of specimens. The subject of "ensilage" was next taken up. Dea. Jones of Ludlow exhibited specimens and made some very interesting remarks, and Mr. Thatcher of Springfield exhibited specimens from the silo on Mr. Riggs' farm at Suffield, Conn. An essay was then read by C. B. Lyman of Greenwich, and after a spirited discussion the institute adjourned till the meeting at West Springfield next week.

HAMPDEN.

The bell in the Congregational church has for some time given an uncertain sound, and on examination it was found to be badly cracked. A new bell will be needed soon.

Merchant Barnes, who has been selling lager and cider, announces that hereafter no such goods are to be kept or sold in his store. He is satisfied his customers and his interests demand a change of base. Let the community all say amen.

The religious interest in the three societies continues. Rev. Mr. Burnham, the evangelist, has held union meetings this week in all the churches alternately. This evening the meeting will be held in the Congregational church, and a delegation from Rev. Mr. Dutton's church in East Longmeadow, where there have been some fifty hopeful conversions of late, will be present to give encouragement to the meeting.

Constable Beebe arrested Frank Cane last Sabbath for disturbing the peace. After his arrest it was ascertained that he had broken into the store of W. H. Barnes and stolen about a dozen bottles of lager beer. He is a tough customer. He resisted the officer and was roughly handled, so that the claret was pretty freely sprinkled. He proves to have been a state prison bird, having served three years in Charlestown. He has been here but three or four weeks, and is now working out a fine and costs in the house of correction.

The dwelling house of Wm. P. Chaffee was brilliantly illuminated Wednesday evening, on the occasion of the marriage of his only daughter, Mattie S. John Sheldon of Montville, Ct., is the happy groom. The party was not large, on account of the health of Mr. and Mrs. Chaffee, but there were besides the immediate relatives a few intimate friends present. The newly-wedded couple started Thursday morning for a trip of a week, when they will bring up at their new home in Montville. The best wishes of all go with them.

MONSON.

A dancing class, under the direction of Miss Winslow of Springfield, began last Tuesday evening at Central Hall.

The Monson Harmony Society will commence rehearsals next Tuesday evening at Academy Hall. All singers are invited.

Quite a number of our farmers attended the farmers' institute at Palmer Tuesday, and speak of the exercises as quite interesting.

A sleigh-ride party from Wilbraham paid us a visit last Saturday afternoon, in a large sleigh drawn by four splendid white horses.

The Farmers' Club met with W. H. Tucker last Monday evening. The next meeting of the club will be Feb. 7th, at Mr. E. P. Keep's.

Monson claims to own some of the fastest horses in this section, and with the fine sleighing the road from Palmer to Monson has decided attractions. If you don't think so, bring out your steppers any fine afternoon or evening.

About 50 couples participated in the masked ball last week Friday evening, and enjoyed themselves hugely. A large number of spectators also were in attendance. Landlord Robbins of the Monson House furnished one of the best of suppers.

The Monson Sportsmen and Fanciers' Club will hold an exhibition Mar. 1st to 4th, similar to the one which was so successful two years ago. Encouraged by their success at that time, they will endeavor to make their second display more elaborate than the first.

It has generally been considered that steady cold weather in Winter is conducive to health, but with zero weather for two months this theory is getting a severe shock. What with colds, croup, measles, fevers, small pox and other ills, we are democratic enough to desire a change.

We don't care much for coasting, but for a little quiet time just take your best girl and commence north of the village, near Lyman Willis's, and end somewhere down near the Methodist church, a matter of a mile and a half, or so. 'Twon't take you long, and then the stroll back is no small matters.

The last entertainment of the Star course will be an illustrated lecture by Wm. I. Marshall on the "Yellowstone National Park," next Monday evening, at Central Hall. The subject is full of interest to all, and the lecturer speaks from personal knowledge, with elaborate calcium light illustrations.

G. H. Newton still remains at the exposition building, Chicago, with his monster whale, and will probably stay there next week. It is as yet undecided whether he will go to Milwaukee or St. Louis after leaving Chicago. He writes that the western people are much pleased with the novel exhibit, and that thousands flock daily to see the great natural curiosity.

WARE AND VICINITY.

The population of Ware is 1-10470 part of that of the whole country, according to the recent census.

At the meeting of the State Central Committee for the purpose of organization at their headquarters in Boston last Saturday, Hon. L. N. Gilbert of Ware was chosen a member of the executive committee, also of the finance committee.

James Connell, "Crazy Jim," who was taken to the insane asylum at Northampton the 4th of this month, had both feet amputated above the ankle on Saturday last. No one knew here but what his feet were all right before he went away, but he told them at the asylum that he had once frozen them; at any rate mortification set in and they had to be taken off.

The sleighing, the best we have had for years, has been well improved the past week. A party of the members of the class of Mrs. Susie J. Barlow, of the Methodist Sunday school, and others to the number of twenty, went to Ragged Hill last week. After partaking of the good cheer of farmer's life and enjoying a good time generally, they returned well pleased with their trip. Thirty-three couples went to Brimfield on Tuesday afternoon, returning by moonlight, and report a very enjoyable time. About thirty members of the high school went in a 'bus to B. B. Snow's, in the west part of the town, Tuesday evening, on the invitation of his son, Ernest B., who was formerly a member of the school, and returned in the "wee sma' hours," and it is said "had a very nice time."

A lively runaway occurred on Main street Tuesday afternoon. A single horse and sleigh came down the street at its highest speed and ran into a horse and sleigh nearly in front of Cutler's store, breaking both sleighs and clearing both horses from them. These two started a pair attached to a wood sled, which ran, leaving the body and hind pair of runners, taking only the front ones with them. Running in front of Gilmore's stable, they jumped the fence into Mr. Buffington's yard, scarcely touching it, the sled not striking the ground for nearly fifteen feet the other side of the fence. They then ran through the yard in front of Dr. Roberts' and again out to Main street by breaking down the front fence. Here they fell and were captured. There were several narrow escapes, but no one was hurt, and but comparatively a small amount of damage done.

MISHAPS AND MISDEEDS.

There was a boiler explosion in one of the Wheeler & Wilson shops at Bridgeport, Ct., Monday, followed by an explosion of naptha by which four men were badly burned.

A woman named Barnard went to the house of a Baptist minister named Curtis, at Lapeer village, about ten miles from Detroit, Sunday night, threw Mrs. Curtis down, poured oil over her and set her on fire, burning her to death. Her motive is unknown.

George Zeigler, a Clinton saloon keeper, shot himself and his dog last week Friday night, and then going to the river near by jumped in and was drowned. His wife disappeared soon after, and is supposed to have committed suicide. They had lived unhappily together.

A German lad while coasting at Millbury last Saturday was met at the bottom of the hill by a heavily loaded "double ripper" from an opposite hill, which threw him several feet into the air, killing him instantly.

Mrs. Matilda Scott, a respectable colored woman living at Plain City, O., her daughter aged 22 and her son of 14 were found murdered in their house Tuesday morning, with their brains scattered around the walls and floor. Robert Garner, a negro who had worked for them and courted the daughter unsuccessfully, has been arrested, and is believed to have outraged her and then murdered the family.

A demented woman piled a quantity of wood around herself in an out-house in the Hebrew orphan asylum, New York, last week Friday night, set fire thereto, and was so badly burned before she was reached that she died.

A brakeman named Williston had both legs crushed by the cars at Springfield on Monday evening.

Two young ladies were killed at Girardville, Pa., Wednesday, by running into a telegraph pole while coasting.

By a collision of freight trains on the Albany freight bridge Wednesday night, three locomotives and a number of cars were wrecked. The damage is estimated at $40,000.

Mrs. Loughtran of Poquonock, Ct., was found frozen to death in the woods Monday. She left home last week Thursday to go to Hayden station, but wandered off the main road and got lost.

Judge Clifford of the United States Supreme Court, who has softening of the brain, still imagines that cases are referred to him for opinions. He last week sent an opinion to the court, which, while incoherent, embraced many points of sound law put in a way which showed that he retained much of what he had learned by long study and experience.

A small boy at Thomaston, Ct., had a very narrow escape from death while coasting the other day, the sled upon which he sat passing over a railroad track and between the trucks of a moving freight car, but he escaped uninjured.

A young man employed in the chair factory at Gardner was stripped of every particle of clothing except his shoes and stockings a few days ago, by his shirt sleeve catching on a shaft. He was glad to get off with his skin.

Congressman Walbridge A. Field of Boston has accepted the proffered place on the Supreme Bench of this State, made vacant by the resignation of Judge Ames.

Dr. Charles F. Folsom, secretary of the board of health, lunacy and charity, has accepted the superintendency of the Danver insane asylum.

The skeletons of three children, apparently about 1 year old, have been found in a bale of foreign rags at a paper mill at Claremont, N. H.

Owing to the scarcity of water, the people of New Ipswich, N. H., are obliged to melt snow.

Literary Notes.

The February Atlantic opens with two chapters of Miss Phelps's admirable serial story, "Friends: A Duet," which will make her admirers more numerous and enthusiastic. William M. Rossetti, in his second paper on "Wives of the Poets," tells briefly the story of the wives of La Fontaine, Moliere, Racine, Lessing, Burger, Goethe, Schiller, and Heine. Richard T. Ely has an interesting account of the "German Co-operative Credit-Unions." John Fisk asks "Who are the Aryans?", and then answers it in a way to secure the hearty thanks of those who have puzzled themselves over the query. Major Ben: Perley Poore continues his authentic and entertaining "Reminiscences of Washington" with a capital paper on the Taylor administration. Richard Grant White returns to his English tour with an article entitled "In London Again." These essays are admirably written, and are both entertaining and full of acute observation. Other essays, poems, stories, reviews of new books, a well-filled "Contributor's Club," and a running account of the books of the month, conclude an excellent number of this sterling magazine. $4 a year. Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston.

The Midwinter (February) Scribner has always been a special number, as rich as the choicest literary matter and the most beautiful wood engravings can make it. Of last year's midwinter number the London Times said: "It is a really magnificent triumph of American pictorial and literary genius." The English publisher of Scribner has telegraphed for 17,000 copies of the present number—an advance of 6000 upon his orders last year, and the largest edition of an American magazine ever sent to England; in fact, it is said to be larger than the monthly sales of any English magazine. The American edition of Scribner has grown during 1880 about 20,000 copies. In the same ratio that Scribner's Monthly is prospering, St. Nicholas, the famous magazine for girls and boys, issued by the same publishers, grows apace. About 100,000 copies of the Christmas (December) number were sold, while the January number has been for some time out of print. In February there is a full account of the Obelisk, richly illustrated from sketches and photographs, showing the great monolith in all stages of moving. The Midwinter Scribner will be ready January 20th, and St. Nicholas five days later.

The Musical Herald, Boston, for January is an excellent number. Apart from the regular departments, which are of great importance to musicians, there are noteworthy articles upon "Young Voices in Church," Dr. E. Tourgee; "Descriptive Music," Gotthold Carlberg; "History of Church Music," W. F. Apthorp; "The Wail and the Wobble," Louis C. Elson; "Music of Ancient Egypt," with illustrations, and many others. The whole is made interesting to the general public as well as to the professional musician."

FIRES.—An exploding oil tank at Poin Breeze, Philadelphia, on Tuesday, caused a $150,000 fire.——One of the Hopeville woolen mills at Jewett City, Ct., was burned last Saturday morning, throwing nearly 100 hands out of work, and causing a loss of about $50,000.——Martin & Co's. extensive morocco factory at Lynn, giving employment to 130 hands, was destroyed by fire early Wednesday morning, and considerable damage done to surrounding property. Loss $135,000.

With the New Year comes an old friend and welcome guest, "Vick's Floral Guide" for 1881. If possible it is more attractive than usual, with its neat exterior, its handsome colored plate, and fine engravings, while its extensive catalogues of seeds and plants both for the flower and kitchen gardens render it as useful as it is ornamental. Being sold for the small sum of 10 cents places it within reach of all, and any one will be well repaid who obtains it from the publisher, James Vick, Rochester, N. Y.

The Boston school committee has resolved that corporeal punishment in the schools ought to be greatly diminished. It is hereafter to be inflicted only by a principal, or by his express authority, and only at a session subsequent to that at which the offence was committed. It is absolutely forbidden in the high schools, and with girls in the grammar school.

Crematory furnaces are now in operation at Zurich in Switzerland, and at Breslau, Dresden and Gotha in Germany. Throughout Germany the prejudice against disposing of the dead by burning is rapidly disappearing.

A farmer told us the other day that he would not be without Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup if it cost five dollars a bottle. It must be a wonderful remedy. The price is only 25 cents a bottle.

Purifying, strengthening, nourishing, quieting and yet very economical are Malt Bitters.

Franz Litz says: "The Steinway Piano presents a harmonic totality of admirable qualities." For sale by Stimpson & Co., Springfield, the one price piano and organ dealers.

Those unhappy persons who suffer from nervousness and dyspepsia should use Carter's Little Nerve Pills, which are made expressly for sleepless, nervous, dyspeptic sufferers. Price 25 cents, all druggists. 2w44

We believe that if every one would use Hop Bitters freely there would be much less sickness and misery in the world; and people are fast finding this out, whole families keeping well at a trifling cost by its use. We advise all to try it.—U. & A. Rochester, N. Y. 2w44

CHILDREN cry for Pitcher's Castoria. No article has ever proved equally satisfactory to physicians, profitable to mothers, or beneficial to children. Castoria assimilates the food, allays feverishness, destroys worms and cures wind-colic, sour-curd, diarrhœa and rash. What gives health to the child promotes rest for the mother. 2w

SPURTS of disgusting mucous, snuffles, deafness, crackling sensations in the head, fœtid breath, nasal twang and tickling in the throat, are signs of catarrh. The Winter Bells.

Hear the sledges with the bells—
Silver bells—
What a world of merriment their melody foretells!
How they tinkle, tinkle, tinkle,
In the icy air of night!
While the stars that oversprinkle
All the heavens seem to twinkle
With a crystalline delight,
Keeping time, time, time,
In a sort of runic rhyme,
To the tintinnabulation that so musically wells,
From the bells, bells, bells, bells,
Bells, bells, bells,
From the jingling and the tingling of the bells.

MARTYRS.

I was at a friend's house one time when the conversation turned on martyrs. A little busy mother, flying in and out, had no time to stop and listen, but she heard enough to cast a shade of sadness over her usually merry countenance, for "what was she compared to a martyr?" How small and insignificant she felt, as she went on with her work, wondering if she should ever be strong, if tried in any way, or whether she had ever had any trial great enough for Jesus to notice! And what was the dear little woman doing that day? Boiling pork and cabbage for some of the lords of creation, and trying to bake at the same time, with wet soggy wood, that had to be dried around the stove, every stick, before it would burn! A toddling baby snatched at her skirts every time she passed him, begging to be took up, but with cheery words and smiles she kept him at bay (for he would let no one else take him,) until she could get her dinner on the table, which she did at just twelve o'clock. The "men folks" pronounced it excellent, and the "boss" very pleasantly asked her if she had fed the hens and chickens, put out the drying apples, picked up those that were lying on the ground, etc., and kindly (!) suggested that a jar of butter, which stood before the pantry window, ought to be carried down cellar, now she had got such a rousing fire! Then he went back to his work, at peace with himself and his stomach, rejoicing in the fact that he had women-folks that could get a good substantial meal on time! And yet that little woman was no martyr, not she! How often she wished she could do something for the dear Lord that bought her, and oftener still, wondered if it would ever be possible for the king to say to her, "Well done!" or "Come, ye blessed of my father!" When Jesus comes for that precious little sister, (for he will not send an angel, she feels so weak and timid) I can just imagine that she will plead with Him to forgive her wasted (!) life, and let her sit at his feet and praise him forever—and for answer the Redeemer will take her lovingly in his arms, and bear her away to a beautiful crown of gold, on which is inscribed these words, "He that is faithful in that which is least, is faithful also in much."—Selected.

Chicago was recently favored with a hotel clerk of more than ordinary suavity of manner in the person of a large ape, which having escaped from confinement, entered the hotel at Frankfort, drove out the clerk and usurped his position. An attempt was made to dislodge him by the persuasive influence of a billiard cue; but the agile brute wrested it from his assailant and kept possession of the office for half an hour. Upon the arrival of a policeman the ape succumbed to his authority and marched quietly to the station house.

"What this nation really needs," remarked young Bemis, who had just begun housekeeping, "the one thing lacking in this country of free and enlightened institutions, and vast and illimitable ideas, is a new kind of stove that can start itself afire by simply pressing a knob."

Some fellow has discovered that there are 33,525 ways of spelling scissors. If he had been correcting manuscript for a newspaper, he would have discovered that there are about 999,999 ways of spelling every word in the English language.

A veritable entry made by the secretary of a secret society in the back woods, reads thus: "After gwing through the yewzuel fawms, there was a collection taken up, but nothing was taken in."

"Where are you going so fast, Mr. Johnson?" "Home, sir, home; don't detain me, I have just got a new bonnet for my wife, and must deliver it before the fashion changes."

A certain justice of the peace would never hear but one of the parties in a case before him—"because," as he said "it always puzzled him when he heard both!"

"What are the wild waves saying, John?" sang out young America to a Chinaman on the beach. "Washee, washee," calmly replied the Celestial with a grin.

According to the Oil City Derrick, Sarah Bernhardt hung up her stocking on Christmas eve, and the only thing Santa Claus could put in it was a lightning rod.

"What is faith?" asked a Sunday school teacher of a boy scholar. He belonged to a base ball nine, and replied, "Betting on a left-handed pitcher."

LADY BEAUTIFIERS.—Ladies, you cannot make fair skin, rosy cheeks and sparkling eyes with all the cosmetics of France, or beautifiers of the world, while in poor health, and nothing will give you such good health, strength and beauty as Hop Bitters. A trial is certain proof. see another column.

Rich in fat-producing material beyond all other medicines are Malt Bitters.

THE APOSTATE'S CREED.—I believe in a chaotic nebula self-existent, evolver of heaven and earth:

And in the differentiation of the original homogeneous mass; its first begotten product which was self-formed into land and water, self organized into plants and animals, reproduced in like species, further developed into higher orders, and ultimately refined, rationalized, and perfected in man; he descended from the monkey, ascended to the philosopher, and sitteth down in the rites and customs of civilization under the laws of a developing sociology; from thence he shall come again by the disintegration of the heterogenized cosmos back into the original homogeneousness of chaos.

I believe in the wholly impersonal absolute; the wholly uncatholic church, the disunion of the saints, the survival of the fittest, the persistence of force, the dispersion of the body, and in death everlasting.—Churchman.

A TALE OF ARABY.—And Abou ben Dhrunk arose himself in the morning, and sware he by the beard of the Prophet that inasmuch as it was the morning of the glad New Year would he be flayed if he partook of wine that leadeth astray evermore. Likewise did he sware that he would eschew the mild zighar and less chew the weed el tobaky to the extent that no more should enter his mouth. But ere the night came behold at the divan of the publican did he say in the language of his country, "Set 'em up for me and the boys;" and behold, when darkness was upon the face of the earth, did he lie prone upon the ground, and his strength was that of a child, and his voice was as that of a stranger, for he talked not to be understood. And he was gathered to the Cadi, who demanded of him recompense for a poor night's lodging.

Which shows that a preamble is of no good unless backed up by a string of resolutions.—Marathon Independent.

The SUN for 1881.

Everybody reads THE SUN. In the editions of this newspaper throughout the year to come everybody will find:

I. All the world's news, so presented that the reader will get the greatest amount of information with the least unprofitable expenditure of time and eyesight. THE SUN long ago discovered the golden mean between redundant fulness and unsatisfactory brevity.

II. Much of that sort of news which depends less upon its recognized importance than upon its interest to mankind. From morning to morning THE SUN prints a continued story of the lives of real men and women, and of their deeds, plans, loves, hates, and troubles. This story is more varied and more interesting than any romance that was ever devised.

III. Good writing in every column, and freshness, originality, accuracy, and decorum in the treatment of every subject.

IV. Honest comment. THE SUN'S habit is to speak out fearlessly about men and things.

V. Equal candor in dealing with each political party, and equal readiness to commend what is praiseworthy or to rebuke what is blamable in Democrat or Republican.

VI. Absolute independence of partisan organizations, but unwavering loyalty to true Democratic principles. THE SUN believes that the Government which the Constitution gives us is a good one to keep. Its notion of duty is to resist to its utmost power the efforts of men in the Republican party to set up another form of government in place of that which exists. The year 1881 and the years immediately following will probably decide this supremely important contest. THE SUN believes that the victory will be with the people as against the Rings for monopoly, the Rings for plunder, and the Rings for imperial power.

Our terms are as follows:

For the Daily SUN, a four-page sheet of twenty-eight columns, the price by mail, post-paid, is 55 cents a month, or $6.50 a year; or, including the Sunday paper, an eight-page sheet of 56 columns, the price is 65 cents a month, or $7.70 a year, postage paid.

The Sunday edition of THE SUN is also furnished separately at $1.20 a year, postage paid.

The price of the WEEKLY SUN, eight pages, fifty-six columns, is $1 a year, postage paid. For clubs of ten sending $10 we will send an extra copy free. Address I. W. ENGLAND,

Lesson of the Paper Mill.

Once a Queen—so runs my story—
Seeking far for something new,
Found it in a mill, where, strangely,
Naught but rags repaid her view.

Rags from out the very gutters,
Rags of every shape and hue,
While the squalid children, picking,
Seemed but rags from hair to shoe.

"What," then rang her eager question,
"Can you do with things so vile?"
"Mould them into perfect whiteness,"
Said the master with a smile.

"Whiteness," quoth the Queen, half doubting;
"But these reddest crimson dyes,
Surely, naught can ever whiten
These to fitness in your eyes."

"Yes," he said, "though these are colors
Hardest to remove of all,
Still I have the power to make them
Like the snowflake in its fall."

(Through my heart at words so simple,
Throbbed with echo, in and out;
"Crimson," "scarlet," "white as snowflake,"
Can this man?—and can God not?)

Now upon a day thereafter,
(Thus the tale went on at will,)
To the Queen there came a present
From the master at the mill.

Fold on fold of fairest texture,
Lay the paper purest white;
On each sheet there gleamed the letters
Of her name, in golden light.

"Precious lesson," wrote the master,
"Hath my mill thus given me,
Showing how our Christ can gather
Vilest hearts from land or sea;

"In some heavenly Alembic,
Snowy white from crimson bring,
Stamp His name on each and bear them
To the palace of the King.

SIXTEEN OLD MAIDS.

Bosworth was a nice little village of some five hundred inhabitants, and boasted of three churches, Congregational, Baptist and Methodist, while a handful of Unitarians gathered occasionally at the town hall, and a few Adventists went to the next village, five miles distant, to worship. The three first mentioned societies were as distinct from each other as black is from white. Not only were they not on visiting terms with each other, but the three stores showed that they did not even trade together. The oldest inhabitant could not remember when this was not so, but the time had come for a revolution, and with this our story has to do.

Miss Betsey Bailey, an elderly maiden lady, was sitting alone in her quiet home, when all at once she broke out with:

"Well, I do declare! Here we be a living along in this heathenish way year after year, and we consider ourselves Christians. It's a shame that five hundred people can't live together in harmony, when so many of us are church members."

The cat, which was sleeping quietly in Miss Betsey's lap, jumped down and ran to the other end of the room, for Miss Betsey had gesticulated in that direction in such a manner as to inflict quite a rap upon the sleeping tabby.

"Well, I do declare," said Miss Betsey; "If I didn't get so eloquent that I scared the cat! I think I must have been born for a female orator."

After this she sat back in her chair, apparently asleep, but she was not; her mind was busy over a plan which she meant to put into immediate operation. It was very late that night when she came to a final decision, and of course she must wait till morning before she could begin. So excited had she become over the matter that it was long past midnight before she retired, and then it was not to sleep.

Early next morning she called on her most intimate acquaintance and neighbor, Miss Sarah Jenkins.

"Sarah, I've got a notion, and it's so seldom that I am ever troubled with such a thing that I had to come right over and tell you before I lost it. Do you feel able this morning to grasp one of the grandest, noblest and brightest ideas the world has ever pondered on?"

"Why, Betsey! for land's sake, don't scare a body to death. You are not going to set the river afire, are you?"

"Not quite so bad as that, I hope, but if we don't turn this town upside down in three months, my name isn't Betsey."

"We? I hope you don't mean to include me in this grand scheme."

"But I do. You are the very one I want for my right hand man."

"The idea of an old maid like me lending aid to the grandest, noblest—"

"Hold on, Sarah, don't repeat that sentence, please; the very walls have ears, and I would not have a word of this get out for the world. All you've got to do is to listen to me, and when you've heard my story you'll agree with me to the letter; if you don't, I won't ask you to help me a bit. Just hand me your knitting and I'll knit and talk; I was in such a hurry to get here this morning that I forgot my work. I can't talk, though, unless I am doing something."

Betsey then proceeded to lay the scheme before her friend, who, when she had concluded, not only agreed to help her, but offered some very valuable suggestions which were earnestly grasped by Betsey. So eager were they with their plans that the noon hour slipped by, and 3 o'clock came before either of them thought of dinner.

Next morning Betsey and Sarah were again together, this time prepared for a walk. Both these ladies were Congregationalists, and many of their neighbors were surprised to see them stop at the house of Eliza Simmons, one of the staunchest sisters of the Methodist persuasion. It couldn't have been an hour before the town was alive with the news.

The Orthodox were shocked, the Methodists opened their eyes in wonder, while the Baptists stood aloof in dignified silence. For one whole day the people talked of nothing but this breach of sectarian etiquette. The next day they had something else to talk about.

These three ladies, in company with Margaret Stiles, another Methodist sister, called upon the West sisters, Mary and Bertha, two of the leading ladies of the Baptist society. They not only called but they stayed all the forenoon and took dinner.

This was on Saturday. On Sunday those six ladies occupied Miss Bailey's pew in the Congregational church. The little flock was so astonished that they paid but little attention to the sermon, and the minister went home with the feeling that not a dozen people in the whole congregation could tell what his text was.

Bosworth was now in a state of intense excitement. Such a thing had never happened before. Many of the Congregationalists called on Miss Betsey and on Miss Sarah, but all they could find out was that the ladies went with them by special invitation.

On Thursday the six ladies attended class meeting at the Methodist vestry. Not only that, but Miss Jenkins and Miss Martha Stiles both took part in the meeting.

What was to be done? Something certainly, for this state of things could not exist long. The Baptists visited the Misses Stiles, but all the information they could get was that they went to both places by invitation, and that Martha felt moved to speak at the latter place, and did so. And the Methodists were no wiser for having called upon the erring sisters.

The next Tuesday saw more mixing of the sects, and Monday night there was a gathering at Miss Betsey's residence of all the ladies engaged in the conspiracy. Sixteen ladies were present, and—was it chance?—all were maiden ladies of 50 years and over. From this time forward there was a great intimacy between these ladies. In vain they tried to induce others to join them; at the end of three months their band still numbered only sixteen.

Betsey and Sarah talked the matter over and concluded to open another chapter of their plan. They were not disappointed in getting only sixteen ladies to join them; in fact, that was nearly double the number they had hoped to get in the beginning.

A few days later a notice appeared on the door of the Baptist store to the effect that it had been sold to Miss Betsey Bailey. About the same time one appeared on the Congregationalist store, saying it had been sold to Miss Sarah Jenkins. Both stores were closed, and the people all had to go to the only remaining store in town, the Methodist, if they would buy anything.

Both ladies next called upon the Methodist brother, and he readily agreed to take all the goods from the other stores, if he could thereby get the whole trade of the town. He knew from bitter experience that one store was all the town could support, and he at once began to help the ladies in their scheme, though he was not aware of the part he was taking—looking only at the fact that he could make more money by the change. This plan of the ladies was a partial success, for the inhabitants fell right into this arrangement because they could not help it.

Still they would not visit, nor attend any but their own church, and three months more passed and still only the sixteen maiden sisters belonged to the visiting company. So chapter number three was opened.

One morning the train brought to the village a very pretty young lady and four large trunks. Such a thing was not a common occurrence, and the depot loungers soon spread the news, stating also that Miss Bailey was there to meet her, and that the young lady called her auntie. It soon came out who she was, and it was rumored that her stay in Bosworth might be permanent.

She was the daughter of Miss Bailey's sister, who died when Rosie was only four years old. Miss Bailey claimed the child then, but her father wished her to remain with his folks, and Miss Bailey was of course forced to give up her claim to the child. Her father was now dead, and she had come to live with Aunt Betsey, whom she had always loved as a mother.

At first she was rather lonely, but when Monday night came, and with it the meeting of the sixteen unsectarian maidens, she had enough to think of. She was of course admitted to the council, and was much amused at the state of society. When the meeting adjourned she said to her aunt:

"Don't the young people visit?"

"Not outside of the denominations to which they belong."

"Didn't a Baptist ever marry a Methodist, or something of the sort?"

"Not within the memory of the oldest inhabitant."

"I don't see how it is possible that a town can survive with such goings on," said Miss Rose, more to herself than to her aunt.

"We don't survive, we merely exist. The town has been worse than dead ever since I have been here, and we maiden ladies have been trying to do something to improve it."

"I think, auntie, you have done well, but you have started at the wrong end. Let me try and help you."

"Certainly you can. I have hoped ever since I got your letter that you would help us in some way when you came. Do whatever you wish, and I will lend all the aid in my power."

Rosie did not unfold her plan to her aunt, but at once began to carry it out. The next Sunday saw her at the Congregational church, dressed in the most becoming manner, and every one pronounced her the prettiest girl they had ever seen. After church she went to the Sunday school, learning the names of all the young ladies and gentlemen near her own age. Next Sunday she was at the Baptist, attending both church and Sunday school. And the next was devoted to the Methodist society.

Then there was a stir. Miss Rosie Anderson was going to give a party at her aunt's (Miss Bailey's) residence, and had sent notes of invitation to all the young people of the town, without regard to sect. The invitations were given out a month before the time of the party, so that every one had a chance to talk it over, as Rosie said, and get their minds made up.

The Sunday following the giving out of the invitations, the soprano at the Baptist church was sick, and the fact not being known until nearly time for meeting, no one could be found to sing. Rosie was present, and when she heard of the difficulty, volunteered to sing for them. The leader gladly accepted her offer, not stopping to think what the good people would say when they saw a Congregationalist in their choir.

When they rose to sing the opening piece Rosie stood in full sight of the congregation. The minister looked horrified, while the deacons covered their faces with their hands to think that a Baptist should go so low as to allow a Congregationalist to sing in their sanctuary. But when she sang the solo which fell to her, the hands dropped from the faces of the deacons, and the expression of the minister's face changed to one of extreme pleasure. Rosie was a beautiful singer, and as her voice rang out clear and soft, the organist forgot to play, so enrapt was she in the singer, and Rosie carried the part without the aid of the organ. Never before had any of them heard such a voice, and they could hardly wait for the time to come for her to sing again. She did not sing alone again that day, but when she came down from the gallery the minister took her by the hand and said:

"Miss Anderson, you have contributed much to the good of the services of the afternoon, and I am very much obliged to you for it."

"You are entirely welcome, Mr. Bush. I think when any one has talents, they should be used for the benefit of all who may need them."

"My idea of it exactly," said the minister, and the two walked out of the church and down the street together. Meeting Miss Bailey near her residence, Mr. Bush was introduced to her, and complimented her upon having such a pleasant and accomplished young lady in her family; he hoped that he might have the pleasure of seeing both the ladies present occasionally at his church.

Rosie sang again at the Baptist church the next Sunday, as the regular singer was not well enough to attend. When she rose in her seat she had the satisfaction of seeing many Methodists and Congregationalists in the audience, and although she felt a certain pride in thinking that they came to hear her sing, she felt happier at the thought that she was to be the means of carrying out her aunt's scheme.

That evening the Methodists had a Sunday school concert, and Rosie played their organ.

She was now on the best of terms with all the young people of the village, and had no doubt that her party would be a success.

And it was. More than fifty were in attendance, which included every young lady and gentleman in town. Aunt Betsey outdid herself in preparing supper. Everything was perfect, even the ice cream from the city, which was a great luxury to the villagers.

At 12 o'clock the party broke up, and Rosie by her managing sent several Methodist maidens home with Baptist beaux, and otherwise mixed up the sects and sexes at her own will.

A few days after the party, Miss Bailey was surprised to receive a visit from Mrs. Bush, wife of the Baptist minister. They spent a very pleasant hour together, when they were interrupted by Mrs. Deacon Wilson, of the Methodist church, and both ladies remained to tea. The ice was now broken, and calling between the different sects was as common as though it was not a new thing for Bosworth.

Everything now working to Rosie's satisfaction, she had time to think of her own troubles. When she came to Bosworth she was by no means a happy girl. Her father was a very strict man, and a young gentleman to whom she was quite partial had not found favor in his eyes, much to the mutual grief of the young people. Her father's sicknsss had been quite long, and so close was her seclusion till the time of his death, that she had not seen Edward Bentley, nor did she see him before she came to Bosworth. She had written to her acquaintances, but they only knew that he had graduated from college and gone away.

About this time, Mr. Bush's health failing, he asked for a year's vacation, agreeing to fill the pulpit during his absence. This leave was of course granted, and the congregation were waiting anxiously for the new minister. All they knew was that he was a young man, and came from a church in the city of Allis-ton, where he was the colleague of Rev. Dr. Howland, one of the most eminent preachers of the Baptist persuasion. Of course they expected something of more that ordinary ability, nor were they disappointed.

But with the sermon we have nothing to do. They wished to make a good impression upon the minister, so Rosie was sought out and invited to sing for them. With her usual good nature she at once accepted. Her position was such that she could not see the minister from where she sat, but when the choir rose to sing she found herself standing face to face with Edward Bentley.

To say that she was surprised would not half express her feelings. She turned first white, then red, and finally sank back into her seat utterly powerless to sing a note.

The minister of course knew nothing of this little affair of the gallery, for the singers went on with the anthem after a moment's hesitation, and by the time they came to the solo, which Rosie was to sing, she was ready to go on with her part. As her voice rang out clear and soft, a look of startled surprise was noticed on the minister's face, and a few, at least, of the congregation were aware that something extraordinary had happened. Rosie, now quite calm, sang her solo sweetly to the end, but when the minister rose to read the opening exercises, some thought they observed a slight tremor in his voice. Only one in the congregation knew why there was such an earnestness in the prayer that was offered for the bringing together of friends long separated, most of them thinking he had reference to the long separation of the churches of the town.

When the services were ended he hurried from the pulpit and met Rosie as she came down from the gallery. There was a greeting that rather surprised those of the congregation who saw it, but a few words of explanation from the pastor set their minds right, and before night the whole town knew that Rosie was the affianced wife of Edward Bentley, the new Baptist minister, and that it was a love affair of long standing.

Everybody went to the wedding, which was in the Congregational church, and everybody went to the reception at Miss Bailey's, which was the grandest affair Bosworth had ever known.

At the end of the year Rosie bade farewell to the little town to go to her city home. But even she, so far distant from the little village, will ever have pleasant memories of the assistance she gave in the religious revolution of Bosworth through the enterprise of sixteen old maids.

A NEW STORY ABOUT LINCOLN.—It was in the early day when the cultured and experienced statesmen thought it incumbent to guide the backwoods President. Senator Sumner called one day to furnish his share of the advice. He talked long, learnedly, and, as usual, rather dictatorially. Lincoln heard him through, smiling occasionally, but making no remark. But, when the stream of senatorial eloquence finally stopped, he said, to the utter amazement of his distinguished guest: "Stand up, Sumner, and let us measure backs." Sumner stood up, with all the reluctance of offended dignity, and the two backs were brought in contact. "Ah," said Lincoln, when the measuring was ended, "my back is a good deal longer than yours, Sumner; yes a good deal longer." The interview, as might be supposed, was speedily terminated; and, as the door closed upon the tall form, Lincoln remarked, as if soliloquizing, to a friend present: "Sumner's a smart man, a mighty smart man. What an education he's got! I wish I had such a one. Sumner ought to be king of Prussia; the place would just suit him."

A La Crosse minister prayed for those "who are smitten with illness, and those who have gone a fishing, and also those too lazy to dress for church."

One Day at a Time.

Only one day
To bear the strain
Of living, and to battle with the pain.

Only one day
To satisfy
With food and covering, as the hours slip by.

Only one day—
To-morrow's care
To-morrow, if it comes, itself shall bear.

Only one day—
Then waste it not
In futile planning where the Lord is not.

Only one day
God gives to me
At once. Oh, may I use it faithfully!

HOW TO ENJOY SOCIETY.

There are some people in this world who, wherever they may go, expect that something special will be done for their entertainment. At a party or church social, for instance, they expect to sit down in a corner by themselves, look agreeable or not, as the fancy strikes them, and wait for some one to come along and amuse them. If the company present have other plans for their evening's enjoyment, these people go home discontented, and say, with a disgusted expression, that they "have had such a stupid time!" Now, these forlorn people never think that if every one in a gathering followed their example, parties, picnics and socials would be transformed into Quaker meetings. The rule holds good here which applies to every other walk of life. To be happy one's self, one must try to impart happiness to others. The commonplace little lady who talks about the weather and the babies to one person after another is happier, better beloved and often more finely cultured than the wise young woman who will only condescend to converse on a subject. Many a fitful conversation and many a delightful friendship have grown out of commonplaces on the weather. It is often for the very reason that she will not talk small talk that the wise young lady must sit in a corner and be disgusted at life all the evening, when she might be making herself agreeable (and, therefore, contented) by helping instead of hindering sociability. This principle applies also to men, but it is not so much neglected by them as by their sisters.—Boston Transcript.

IT'S WHAT YOU SPEND.

"It's what thee'll spend, my son," said a sage old Quaker, "not what thee'll make, which will decide whether thee's to be rich or not." The advice was trite, for it was Franklin's in another shape. "Take care of the pence, and the pounds will take care of themselves." But it cannot be too often repeated. Men are continually indulging in small expenses, saying to themselves, that it's only a trifle, yet forgetting that the aggregate is serious, that even the seashore is made up of petty grains of sand. Ten cents a day is even thirty-six dollars and a half a year, and that is the interest on a capital of six hundred dollars. The man that saves ten cents a day only is so much richer than he who does not, as if he owned a life estate in a house worth six hundred dollars; and if invested quarterly, does not take half that time. But ten cents a day is child's play, some will exclaim. Well, then, John Jacob Astor used to say, that when a man, who wishes to be rich, has saved ten thousand dollars, he has won half the battle. Not that Astor thought ten thousand much, but he knew that, in making such a sum, a man acquired habits of prudent economy, which would keep him advancing in wealth. How many, however, spend ten thousand in a few years in extra expenses, and then, on looking back, cannot tell, as they say, "where the money went to." To save, is to get rich. To squander, even in small sums, is the first step towards the poor-house.

A CRUEL THING.

It is a cruel thing to send a boy out into the world untaught that alcohol in any form is fire, and will certainly burn him if he puts it into his stomach.

It is a cruel thing to educate a boy in such a way that he has no adequate idea of the dangers that beset his path.

It is a mean thing to send a boy out to take his place in society without understanding the relations of temperance to his own safety and prosperity, and to the safety and prosperity of society. Of course the great barrier between the youth and correct knowledge—the great mystifier and misleader—is respectable society.

This is practically saying to the young, pretty universally, that wine is a good thing.

Fine dinners are never given without it, and good men and women drink it daily.

They do not get drunk, they may be conscientious and religious, and many of them not only do not regard wine-drinking as harmful, but as positively beneficial.

The boy and the young man see all this, and think, naturally, that those who have experience in drink should know better about its results than those who let drink alone.—Scribner's Magazine.

A MISSING SAW-MILL.

The other day Tom G. met an old friend, who was formerly a prosperous young lumberman up north, but whose bad habits of drinking had resulted as they often do, though he has since reformed, and is trying to do better.

"How are you?" said Tom G.

"Pretty well, thank you; but I've just been to a doctor to have him look at my throat."

"What's the matter?"

"Well, the doctor wouldn't give me any encouragement. At least he couldn't find what I wanted him to find."

"What did you expect him to find?"

"I asked him to look down my throat for the saw-mill and farm that had gone down there."

"And did he see anything of it?"

"No; but he advised me if I ever got another mill to run it by water."

A good story is going the rounds at the expense of a Westfield justice who recently tied the nuptial knot for a sable couple. Noticing they were loth to depart after the ceremony, he inquired what they were waiting for. "Fur you to kiss de bride," replied the groom. It's safe to say the justice collapsed.

A fashion paper tells us that silken hosiery is now all the rage in Paris, "with insertions of portraits and medallions of point lace." Fancy glancing at your lady-love's stocking and finding there the portrait of—some other fellow!

A COMMON MISPRONUNCIATION.

"There goes Parn*ell*, the Irish agitator!" observed a gentleman on the seat before me, in a railroad car. "Parn*ell*, is it?" replied his companion. "That is Mr. Parn*ell*," whispered the lady behind me to her daughter. "Mr. Parn*ell*. Ah!" Now here were four persons, educated people evidently, who in the course of two minutes mispronounced a plain English name. It is always annoying to hear the accent misplaced on a name, whether local or personal. We Americans seem to have taken a fancy for throwing the accent in family names on the last syllable, if possible, in defiance of all sound rules of good sense or good taste. These two qualities, by the bye, are very closely allied. You can never have good taste without good sense as the foundation. False taste is inevitably absurd. Now this common mispronunciation of names ending in ell has neither good sense nor good taste in its favor. It is opposed to the spirit of our mother tongue. Last year I had a nephew in love with a charming girl, Miss Brownell; of course she was Lily Brown*ell* to her lover. For three months I heard Tom mispronounce her name, or that of her family, a dozen times a day. A few months later, as ill luck would have it, his sister was courted by Harry Bedell, pronounced Bed*ell* of course, Now Brownell and Bedell are good English names, and should have a good English pronunciation. Bedell is no doubt the same as Beadle. Many English names ending in ell were originally connected with the common nouns well or wall. The governor of the State of New York to-day is Governor Corn*ell*. The university in Western New York is Corn*ell* University. We have known a Judge Hubb*ell*. Lidd*ell* and Wadd*ell* are instances of the same fancy. Litt*ell's* Magazine travels over half the country. But the propensity to throw the accent on the last syllable is not confined to names ending in ell. Barnard is frequently pronounced Bar*nard*, Tricketts becomes Trick*etts*. General Steuben is General Steu*ben*, in spite of his German birth. That distinguished gentleman, the present secretary of state, is spoken of, in rustic parlance, as Mr. E-varts. Not long since we were shown a collection of the famous caricatures of Ho-garth! A year or two since we were introduced—with a flourish—"to an Assemblyman from a Western State," the Honorable Hub-bard!

O shade of old Mother Hubbard!—February Atlantic.

WORDS OF TRUTH.—We need a revival of religion in this country—of true religion, which includes veneration, charity and serious thoughtfulness. The age is frivolous, material, inclined to scoff at the highest things and to be content with what is petty and mean. As a people we are growing rich, while the formation of character to make riches safe lags behind. The old faith languishes, and no new faith strong enough to be a guide to life has yet taken its place. Our young men who have the best advantages are indifferent. They are not in earnest. They seem to think that enthusiasm is vulgar. They imitate the repose of maturity without having gained its wisdom. They do not stand alone, but lean upon their ancestors, or their patrimony, or their alma mater. They lack the vigor of pioneers in thought, and are satisfied with what is prepared and furnished to their order. Life to them is not a struggle for a subsistence, or a combat with evil, but a holiday and a seeking for amusement. Satiety is followed by ennui. More earnestness, a deeper purpose in life, a more humble reverence, a more active charity—these elements of true religion are needed to save us from mere materialism.—Boston Herald.

ONIONS.—From our own experience, and the observation of others, we can fully indorse the testimony of the St. Louis Miller, of the healthful properties of the above esculent. Lung and liver complaints are certainly benefited, often cured, by a free consumption of onions, either cooked or raw. Colds yield to them like magic. Don't be afraid of them. Taken at night all offence will be wanting by morning, and the good effect will amply compensate for the trifling annoyance. Taken regularly they greatly promote the health of the lungs and the digestive organs. An extract made by boiling down the juice of onions to a syrup, and taken as a medicine, answers the purpose very well, but fried, roasted or boiled onions are better. Onions are a very cheap medicine, within everybody's reach, and they are not by any means as "bad to take" as the costly nostrums a neglect of their use may necessitate.—Scientific American.

One night during Mr. Moody's meetings in San Francisco a very drunken man came tumbling from the street into the aisle of the church where the evangelists were holding services; he began making a disturbance, and the ushers were going to put him out, but Mr. Moody interposed. "Make him sit down," he said, and then he appointed a Christian body guard for the poor drunkard, who probably dimly realized what was done for him. "I cannot preach to-night," said Mr. Moody, "every word of my sermon is driven out of my mind." So he held a special prayer meeting for the drunkard's benefit, and the situation was an intense one as the inebriate cried out, "Oh, Mr. Moody, do save me if you can." It would be an unworthy ending of such a story to have to say that the man returned again to his mire. He did not, but at the present time is a new and very earnest convert.

LIVING IN QUIET.—A rule for living happily with others is to avoid having a stock of subjects of disputation. It mostly happens when people live much together that they have certain set topics, around which, from frequent dispute, there is such a growth of angry words, mortified vanity and the like, that the original subject of difference becomes a standing subject of quarrel, and there is a tendency in all minor disputes to drift down to it. Again, if people wish to live well together they must not hold too much to logic, and suppose that everything is to be settled by sufficient reason. Dr. Johnson saw this clearly with regard to married people when he said: "Wretched would be the pair above all means of wretchedness who should be doomed to adjust by reason, every morning, all the minute details of the domestic day."

The Journal.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 29, 1881.

PRESIDENT HAYES has nominated Stanley Matthews of Ohio to succeed Judge Swayne on the supreme bench. Mr. Matthews is quite a brilliant man, and though he has not shown the judicial temperament which should be the first requisite in a candidate for this high office, he will doubtless make a very good judge.

LIMA was occupied by the Chilians on the 17th inst., after a severe battle near Chorillos, eight miles south of the city, in which the Peruvians lost 7000 killed and 2000 prisoners. Gen. Pierola, President of Peru, and commander of the army, fled, and Peru has nothing left but to accept such terms of peace as Chili may offer. The war has been in progress for some months, and Chili has met with almost unvarying success from the first.

WEST VIRGINIA has elected J. N. Condon United States Senator, New Jersey W. J. Sewell, and Wisconsin Philetus Sawyer, while Texas returns Senator Maxey. After balloting several days the Tennessee Legislature on Wednesday elected H. E. Jackson, Democrat, Horace Maynard at one time coming within three votes of being elected. In Pennsylvania the Legislature is still balloting fruitlessly, with no indications of a compromise between the Oliver and Grow factions of the Republicans.

A CORRESPONDENT of the New York Times thinks we have one State too many. He has lived in Nevada twenty years, and says its "statehood is a farce." The population is only 62,000, and is growing less, but the State has a more elaborate government than the great State of New York, and an equal representation in the United States Senate, and he thinks the State ought to be remanded to a territorial condition, or become a part of California. After a State is once made, it is not so easily unmade, and this fact should lead Congress to be slow in adding to the present number.

CONSIDERABLE opposition is manifested at Boston to the proposition to submit to the people the question of a biennial election amendment to the constitution. The opponents of the measure are more active than its friends, but this is no reason why the people should not be given a chance to vote on the question. Thirty-one States have changed from annual to biennial elections, and none of them seem to wish to return to the old way. The people of this State ought at least to have the privilege of expressing their views at the ballot box, and they can be safely trusted to act intelligently on the subject, we believe.

THE committee on the census at Washington has reported a bill fixing the number of representatives at 311. The bill prepared by Chairman Cox fixed the number at 301, which gave to the South a gain of 6 members, and to the West a gain of 8, while New England and the middle States lost 6 members. This was considered a fair and equitable plan—too fair, it seems, for the rest of the Democrats on the committee, and they obliged him to report a bill giving the Democrats the utmost advantage possible. This bill gives the South a gain of 12 members, while the whole North and West gain but 6. Partisanship could hardly be carried further than this.

THE telegraph wires in New York suffered severely in the storm of snow and sleet which prevailed last week Friday. Poles were prostrated in every direction and thousands of wires were snapped by the weight of ice. Horse car travel was stopped and trains on the elevated roads delayed by the trailing masses of wires, and the city was completely isolated from telegraphic communication with the rest of the country. The telegraph lines at Boston and along the Sound also suffered considerably. A few more such experiences would probably lead the telegraph companies to run their wires underground, a thing which ought to have been done before this in the large cities.

THEY want $40,000 down at Washington to make a grand "splurge" with when President Garfield is inaugurated, and as they are about $35,000 short of that amount, it is proposed to ask contributions from some of the larger cities to make it up. We doubt if they meet with a very favorable response. As Washington people are the only ones who will reap any benefit from such a demonstration, they are the ones to pay for it, and if they cannot do this, they had better let it alone. Gen. Garfield would be just as thoroughly inaugurated if he walked alone to the Capitol, as he would if surrounded by all the pomp and glory possible; and it would be quite as impressive a scene.

THE commission appointed by President Hayes last month to visit the Ponca Indians submitted their report on Wednesday. They pronounce the removal of the Poncas from their reservation a most unfortunate and injudicious act, resulting disastrously to the Indians, who were robbed of their land without any show of reason or justice. They say the Poncas have been strongly desirous of returning up to within a few months, when various considerations have led them to conclude to settle where they are, and the commission recommend that an allotment of 160 acres of land be made to every man, woman and child of the Ponca tribe, to be selected by them on the old reservation in Dakota, or on the land now occupied by them. They urge a prompt settlement of the matter, and also recommend that the courts be opened to the Indians.

It is rumored that Vanderbilt has purchased from Jay Gould a controlling interest in the Union Pacific road.

AT THE STATE HOUSE.

Representative J. F. Stone of Winchester died of pneumonia on Wednesday, making the third death in as many weeks among the members of the House. It is believed that there never have been so many deaths in one session before.

The committee on double taxation has closed its hearings, and will, it is thought, report a bill similar to the one defeated last year.

The committee on liquor law has voted to report a prohibitory bill. One peculiarity of the bill will be a provision that if a person arrested for drunkenness tells where he bought his liquor, he shall be released without trial. The bill proposes a State liquor commission, which shall supply five agents in Boston, and one in each other city and town.

The Hoosac Tunnel committee will probably report a bill giving the railroad commissioners authority to permit the running of Sunday trains.

The railroad committee has been ordered to inquire what legislation is needed "to prevent accidents to persons getting on or off railroad cars while in motion." If a law can be passed that will always prevent accidents under such circumstances, it surely ought to be done at once.

The committee on constitutional amendments report that the proposed amendment to the constitution providing for biennial elections, adopted by the last Legislature, ought to be agreed to. Four members of the committee dissent from the report.

The Senate has adopted, and the House rejected a rule that forbids the Legislature changing its own pay after the first Wednesday in March, unless by a four-fifths vote taken by roll-call.

A customer seated himself at a table in a Main street restaurant the other day and said to the waiter: "Mister, I want to see yer time table." He was told that they had none, but if he wished for anything to eat he could have it. He insisted upon seeing the "time table" however, and was finally asked if it was the bill of fare he wanted, when he promptly answered, in a tone of relief, "Yes, be jabers, ye have it." His wants were soon supplied, and he went on his way rejoicing.

Deputy Sheriff Northrop arrested John Pender, a freight brakeman on the New London Northern Railroad, for drunkenness Tuesday evening. G. H. Morrow, another brakeman, resented the arrest, and attempted to prevent it, but Mr. Northrop stuck to his prisoner and got him into the lockup safely. He then arrested Morrow and put him in the same place. The next morning Pender paid his $1 fine, and Morrow paid $10.65 for the fun of interfering with the officer.

A woman was summoned to appear before the district court as a witness the other day, but she thought her household and family duties paramount, and so paid no attention to the call. After the court had waited some time for her, an officer was dispatched with a capias, and she finally yielded to force of circumstances and accompanied him, and after giving her testimony was allowed to depart, upon paying a fine for contempt of court. She will probably treat the next summons with a little more respect.

Last week Friday's snow storm was the hardest one of the season yet, and though not much over six inches of snow fell, it was very solid, and railroad trains were generally delayed. The evening steamboat train from the north did not reach here until 1 o'clock Saturday morning. Hastings's train north was still later in reaching Brattleboro and did not get back here Saturday until nearly noon, coming down with only a baggage car attached to the locomotive. Trains on the Ware River road were much delayed. Engineer Adams got off the track in the yard at Winchendon Saturday morning, and did not get down here until evening. On the Boston & Albany road the morning modoc was three hours late, and the other trains were all more or less late, with two locomotives to draw them. No freights went over the road until the latter part of the afternoon.

Rev. O. L. Leonard has conducted revival meetings in this village every evening this week, and also every afternoon except Monday, the meetings being held in the Congregational and Baptist churches in alternation. Wednesday was observed by the two churches as a special day of fasting and prayer, a meeting of great interest and power being held at the Baptist church from 11 a. m. until about 5 p. m. Last (Friday) evening the meeting was held in the Baptist church, and a delegation from Three Rivers was expected to be present. This afternoon, at 2.30 o'clock, there will be a children's and young people's meeting at the Congregational church, and another at the Baptist church at 3 p. m. on Sunday. Preaching this evening at the Congregational church at 7.30, and union meetings Sunday afternoon and evening at the Baptist church. In the afternoon at 1.30 Mr. Leonard will preach a special sermon to the churches. Subject of evening discourse, "The Wedding Garment." The meetings for next week have not yet been decided upon, but will be announced on Sunday, and they will in all probability be continued much the same as this week, as the churches are awakened, and are hoping and praying for a great revival work in this place. There is certainly room here for a great work of this kind.

Eugene Mitkiewicz, the Russian Count who married an Amherst girl several years since, and will be remembered by many people in this vicinity, is again in trouble, it seems. The New York Sun of Wednesday published the following dispatch from Baltimore: Eugene, Count Mitkiewicz, whose arrest here last year for alleged swindling operations caused such a sensation, is again in trouble. It may be remembered that Mitkiewicz, after his arrest, failed for a large amount, and subsequently it was learned that he was the same man who, several years previously, served a sentence in the New York Tombs for swindling. He is a genuine Count, and after his release from the Tombs he came to Baltimore, amassed a large fortune, and moved in the best society until the expose was made at the time of his arrest. Since then he has refused to pay his debts, although believed to be worth a considerable sum of money. On Monday Mr. F. W. Waterman, a well-known resident of Baltimore County, called at the residence of the Count and insisted upon the payment of a large sum of borrowed money. Mitkiewicz is alleged to have set upon his visitor, and after beating him unmercifully flung him from the house. Waterman is seriously injured, and to-day made deposition before Justice Cole, who granted a warrant for Mitkiewicz's arrest. The Count has thus far eluded capture.

The band fair last week was a grand success financially, and judging by appearances all who went had a very enjoyable time. Sagendorph, the china tea set by Peter Paul, the hanging lamp by little Johnnie Kennedy. The total receipts were $572, clearing $400 for the band after paying all expenses.

We do not believe there is a shadow of truth in the reports that James Connell's feet were frozen by the neglect of any of those in whose charge he was at any time before he was carried to the asylum, or after he arrived there. It seems he told his keepers that he once froze them in Canada, but not claiming even in his insane talk that it was this year. It seems more likely that the injury was received in trying to kick down the grating of the room in which he was confined.

At the meeting of the Village Improvement Association on Wednesday evening the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: Geo. G. Hall President; C. F. Blood and Frank Sibley Vice Presidents; F. D. Gilmore Secretary; Dwight F. Marsh Treasurer. The above officers, with J. H. Greenville Gilbert, Levi W. Robinson and E. H. Baker constitute the executive committee. The total number of running feet of concrete walk laid the past year was 1792. On Bank street a five-foot concrete walk with stone curbing 464 feet has been laid at an expense of $439, part of which was paid by abuttors. A sewer has also been put in by the town under the direction of the association, and the street graded at an expense of $475. On West street there has been completed a six-foot concrete walk with three-foot turf border, 764 feet in length, at a total expense of $294, the abuttors paying one-half the expense. On South street 296 feet of concrete walk six feet wide with stone curbing has been put in at an expense of $294, all of which was paid by the abuttors. Also there is about 250 feet more in progress, which the cold weather prevented finishing, which is to be in part paid for by the abuttors. The receipts have been for the year $1521.91, expenditures $1452.41, leaving a balance of $69.50, which will be needed to complete the unfinished work on South street. It will be seen by the above statement that the appropriation by the town of $500 has been the means of the expenditure in improvements of more than three times that amount, besides stimulating many improvements by individuals, the amount of which did not go through the hands of the association. There were also quite a number of trees set out in the Spring where needed.

Without an E.

It is well known that the letter e is used more than any other letter in the English alphabet. Each of the following verses contains every letter of the alphabet except the letter e:

"A jovial swain should not complain
Of any buxom fair
Who mocks his pain and thinks it gain
To quiz his awkward air.

"Quixotic boys who look for joys,
Quixotic hazards run;
A lass annoys with trivial toys,
Opposing man for fun.

"A jovial swain may rack his brain,
And tax his fancy's might;
To quiz is vain, for 'tis most plain,
That what I say is right."

A STREET CROWD.

The other morning two gentlemen were looking out of the window of a house on Market street, when they observed a cabbage roll off a market wagon that was passing. Instantly over a dozen well-dressed and apparently sane persons began yelling after the wagon as though the vegetable had been a gold watch or a thousand dollar bill. The driver stopped about half a square off, looked back at the cabbage, yawned, and drove on.

"What an absurd fuss people in the street make over trivial occurrences," said one of the gentlemen. "Now, I'll bet a silk hat that I could get a crowd of five hundred persons around that cabbage inside of thirty minutes, and yet not leave this room."

"I'll take the bet," said his friend, pulling out his watch. "Are you ready?"

"Yes; give the word."

"It is now 11.30. Go!"

The proposer of the wager led his friend to the window, threw up the sash, and taking a cane pointed earnestly at the mud-covered cabbage with a terrified expression. Presently a hack driver noticed the action and began to stare at the vegetable from the curbstone; then a bootblack stopped, then a bill poster, a messenger boy and a merchant.

"What's the matter?" inquired a German, approaching the innocent base of his national dish.

"Don't touch it! Look out there! Stand back!" shouted the gentleman at the window.

At his horror stricken tones the crowd fell back precipitately and formed a dense circle around the innocent cabbage. Hundreds came running up, and the excitement increased rapidly.

"Look out there!" frantically screamed the better, waving his cane. "Take that dog away, quick!"

Several stones were thrown at a cur that was sniffing around the cabbage.

"Take care!" said a car driver to a policeman, who was shouldering his way through the mass.

"It's an infernal machine, nitro-glycerine—or something."

Meanwhile the sidewalk was blocked, the street became impassable, women screamed and rushed into shops, and a storekeeper underneath began to tie a bucket on the end of a long pole with which to pour water on the devilish invention. The crowd by this time numbering over a thousand the two gentlemen moved away from the window and sat down. In a few moments there was a hurried tap at the door, and there appeared a man who had been sent as a delegate from the mass meeting outside.

"I should like to know, gentlemen," he said, "what the facts are."

"What facts?"

"Why, what there is peculiar about that cabbage out there."

"Nothing in the world," was the soft reply, "except that it seems to be surrounded by about a thousand of the biggest fools in town. Do anything else for you?"

The man reflected a moment, said he "guessed not," and retired. Before he handed in his report, however, Capt. Short's watch had dispersed the mob, and clubbed two hundred and eleven separate persons for creating a disturbance.—San Francisco Post.

In 1879, when Providence, R. I., established its now famous wood yard for tramps, the outdoor relief amounted to $7,333, and 1,143 tramps were forced to work in the yard. During last year only 634 tramps ventured near the place, while the amount of relief decreased to $4,736. This wood yard has proved the best investment the city ever made.

A grand jury at Newark, N. J., has recommended to the court that the whipping post be set up, in order that wife beaters may be adequately punished, believing that this would be a better remedy for the evil than the ordinary fine and imprisonment.

At Niagara Falls, the "Horseshoe" is frozen solid for 200 feet from either shore. Mounds of stalactites, large icicles and the ice mountains are continually making their way upward, and have now attained a height of more than 100 feet.

A fish preserving company has been organized at Philadelphia, with a capital of $200,000, whose object is to freeze and preserve shad and other salt water fish and market them at times when the fish are not in season.

There is an extraordinary rush of striped bass up the Hudson. Fishermen from Peekskill north say they never saw the like before. Thousands are caught daily in nets, and they weigh from 5 to 25 pounds each.

J. W. Drexel, a horse railroad president, has located several coffee rooms at the termini of the different horse railroads in New York city, where employes can obtain a good cup of coffee for 2 cents.

The cotton mills of this country give employment directly to 181,628 persons, employ 230,223 looms and nearly eleven million spindles.

A woman who had stolen a small quantity of tobacco, at Alexandria, Va., received thirty-nine lashes on her bare back.

Don't talk too much. Learn how to be silent. There is nothing like the man or woman who can keep the mouth shut. Not that people should always keep the tongue still—it is made for use—but there are times when silence is the best and most effective reply. When a boor speaks roughly or uncivilly to you, when you are asked an impertinent question, when a sneer is conveyed under cover of an inquiry for information, or when having appealed to you on a question of taste your opinion is met with ridicule; the best answer in these and like exigencies is masterful silence. Silence bespeaks reserve power, conscious strength, dignity, self-command.

We have as little sympathy for the Episcopal church as for any of the other sects so numerous in our land. But for one thing we honor Episcopalians. They are not ashamed to congregate in the humblest chapel when such is the best at their command. The churchman will turn down an alley, pass through a lane, and find his 20 by 30 chapel in the most dingy part of the city or town, if there is no alternative between that test of church loyalty and the sneaking off to a costly church where his creed and formula are not honored. In that regard, if in no other, he is apostolic.—Christian Leader.

"A blizzard," says a Dakota man, "is the northwestern name for a gale of wind filled with snow and icy particles as fine as rice powder, with a temperature of 10° to 20° below zero. A genuine blizzard is so fierce that you can neither face it nor distinguish objects ten feet away from you. In Dakota and Minnesota, during the prevalence of a blizzard, farmers only venture out of their houses with guiding ropes around their persons, to enable them to find their way back."

A Boston correspondent writes: "Do you love to sneer at 'Boston culture'? Then your heart will glow when I tell you about an irreverent New Yorker, condemned by business obligations to spend Christmas week here. Thinking to amuse himself by seeing the city, he stepped on a Beacon street car and said to the conductor, "Does this car pass the new art Mu-se-um?" "No," was the reply, "but it passes the new art Mu-se-um."

"I believe in a personal devil," said Mr. Moody, at a revival meeting, held in a remote western city. "That's true, that's true—you are right there, stranger," said an old farmer, rising from his seat in his earnestness. Whereupon a calm-faced, placid-looking woman arose from the other end of the pew, took him by the ear, and led him slowly out; and the assembly knew then for the first time, that the old man's mind was filled with domestic thoughts instead of the hereafter.

A gentleman went home the other night with a severe cold and said to his wife, "I have been told to-day to take hot tea, pennyroyal tea, barley tea, baked lemon tea, beef tea, curry tea, hop tea, celery tea, liquorice tea, red pepper tea, baked onion tea, mint tea, hay tea, baked apple tea and burnt sugar tea." "Well, said the sympathizing wife, "which do you think you will take?" "If you have no objections," said he, "I think I will take a hot gin sling."

Me Lud Beaconsfield, in his alleged novel, "Endymion," says, speaking of America: "A country that borrows its language, its laws and its religion, cannot have its inventive powers much developed." Me Lud forgets that America only borrowed the English language in order to prepare the dictionaries which Englishmen are compelled to consult when they really want to know what the language is.—Detroit Free Press.

No liquor licenses have been granted in Potter County, Penn., since 1860, and here are the grand effects: "At a recent term of the court, the district attorney informed the court that he had no indictments to present to the grand jury; the sheriff also stated that he had no criminals in the prison; the directors of the poor reported that they had no one to keep at the county's charge."

If some parents were as anxious to keep their children from bad reading, sensational story papers, and the like, as they are to have their clothes clean, and to make them say "ma'am" and "sir," this would gradually develop into a purer age, the moral tone of society would be heightened, and good manners would necessarily be furthered.

A family were just upon the eve of departure for Chicago on a two weeks' visit with relatives. When the little girl knelt down to lisp her evening prayer she surprised her mother by closing: "Dood bye Dod, we'se doin' to Chitado an' 'oo won't see me adain for two whole weets!"

Here are some curious names of towns and villages in Kentucky: Pulltight, Pinchem Slyly, Pluck'-em In, Shirt Tail Bend, Shakerag, Dog Walk, Lick Skillet, Grab All, Tiwa-pa-ta, Fool's Hollow, Moll't Gut, Lowden's Hole, Devil's Den, and Hell's Half-Acre.

There was a fight imminent between two boys a few evenings ago. One of them darkly intimated that he was bigger than the other. The smaller, who was the son of a deacon, defiantly retorted: "I don't care if you're as big as a church debt; you can't scare me."

"I say, Clem," cried two disputing darkies, appealing for decision to a sable umpire, "which word is right—dizactly or dezactly?" The sable monarch reflected for a moment, and then, with a look of wisdom, said, "I can't tell perzactly."

Pegging Away.

There was an old shoemaker, sturdy as steel,
Of great wealth and repute in his day,
Who, if questioned his secret of luck to reveal,
Would chirp like a bird on a spray,
"It isn't so much the vocation you're in,
Or you're liking for it," he would say,
"As it is that forever, through thick and through thin,
You should keep up a pegging away."

I have found it a maxim of value whose truth
Observation has proved in the main;
And which well might be vaunted a watchword by youth
In the labor of hand and of brain;
For even if genius and talent are cast
Into work with the strongest display,
You can never b sure of achievement at last
Unless you keep pegging away.

There are shopmen who might into statesmen have grown,
Politicians for handiwork made,
Some poets who better in shops had shone,
And mechanics best suited in trade;
But when once in the harness, however it fit,
Buckle down to your work night and day,
Secure in the triumph of hand and of wit,
If you only keep pegging away.

There are times in all tasks when the fiend Discontent
Advises a pause or a change,
And, on field far away and irrelevant bent,
The purpose is tempted to range;
Never heed, but in sound recreation restore
Such traits as are slow to obey,
And then, more persistent and staunch than before,
Keep pegging and pegging away.

Leave fitful endeavors for such as would cast
Their spendthrift existence in vain,
For the secret of wealth in the present and past,
And of fame and of honor, is plain;
It lies not in change, nor in sentiment nice,
Nor in wayward exploit and display,
But just in the shoemaker's homely advice
To keep pegging and pegging away.

LAW VERSUS LOVE.

Mr. Popkins was a bachelor. I mention this fact with all due reverence for the name—and sympathy for the condition. He was well-to-do in the world, if owning a fine farm and being plaintiff in a lawsuit is any criterion. Aside from Mr. Perkins's misfortune in being a bachelor, he had one fault—a general aversion to female society and a particular aversion to Miss Sallie Hopkins, the defendant in the above-named lawsuit.

Now, be it known, that though Miss Sallie's name was put down on the list of O. M.'s (old maids), she was the roundest, cosiest, dimple-cheeked spinster that ever lived in Lincoln. She had the softest brown eyes, with a trick of looking down and peeping under the lashes, perfectly bewildering, and her hair waved and shone in such a manner that a susceptible lady like you and me would have felt an irresistible desire to have sole ownership of the "nut-brown locks."

But, however fascinating Miss Sallie was to the sex in general, as I have said, between her and Mr. Popkins there was a deadly feud, and the cause of all the trouble was a meadow, spreading far and wide and unconscious between Miss. Sallie's and Mr. Popkins's farms.

Now the truth of the matter was this: The meadow justly belonged to Mr. Popkins, but instead of going to Miss Sallie and frankly stating the case, he must serve a process of law. Miss Sallie flew all to pieces, and declared that she would maintain her rights at any cost.

From the manner in which it ended, one could see that had Mr. Popkins gone to her himself, she would have relinquished it gracefully, but a woman has a mortal terror of being forced to do anything. Tie a string around her neck, feed her with sugar-plums, and you can lead her to the jumping-off place; but go to drive her, and for obstinacy she will beat Mark Twain's mule all to pieces.

When Miss Sallie met Mr. Popkins on the street, her nose was decidedly "retrousse," and Mr. Popkins looked like an automaton Cardiff giant. The neighbors were forced to take part in this case, for when invitations were issued for the regular tea-parties, those who invited Mr. Popkins were obliged to omit Miss Sallie, and vice versa.

In the meantime the lawsuit dragged its slow length along from session to session, from term to term, until it was as familiar as A B C. But fate had taken in hand the destiny of those two obstinate individuals, and soon brought matters to a most satisfactory conclusion, though the unconscious mediator was rather a burlesque on the higher tragedy daily enacted.

There lived close to these belligerents a good-natured old man, nearly as deaf as a post, who had the greatest faculty for blundering on unfortunate facts of any individual known either in ancient or modern history.

He never heard anything correctly, and it was an utter impossibility to try to explain, and if you attempted it you would find yourself floundering in a perfect slough of despair.

Miss Sallie and Mr. Popkins had received notice that their case would come up for the final hearing in Harrow on Tuesday of the next week. Miss Sallie concluded to take the stage; Uncle Bed Dopper, our deaf friend, had business a little distance on the road, and he would take the stage too; and Mr. Popkins's saddle horse fell sick just as he was needed, and there being no time for other arrangements, he must take the same conveyance.

Miss Sallie came floating down to the gate with white ribbons and bows, and dainty dress, sufficient to bewilder a man with as stony a heart as the sphinx, and saw approaching from the opposite side her foe, in immaculate broadcloth and shirt front. For a moment the color rushed to her cheeks, and she half resolved to go back; but to be outdone by a man, and he a Popkins, was not to be thought of, so she stepped into the coach with an air of sixteen Queen Victorias, elevating her head until it made an acute angle with her nose, and came sublimely unconscious of any one's presence. Mr. Popkins seated himself as though he had swallowed a whole foundry, and had his pockets full of eggs for dessert. Just then came Uncle Ben, puffing and blowing, utterly unconscious of the oaths of the impatient Jehu.

"Good morning, Miss Sallie," said he, carefully seating himself beside her. "Good morning, Mr. Popkins. Where might you be going, and what for?"

"To Harrow," said Mr. Popkins, in his most polite manner, answering the first question, and ignoring the last.

"Du tell!" and the round face fairly beamed with placid surprise. "Going to marry? Well, I told Hester last night that was the suit after all. There ain't no more capable girl anywhere than Sallie, and I am glad you found it out. And Mr. Popkins is wonderful clever," turning to Sallie; "and instead of there being two farms and a lawsuit, there need be only one. Law, bless me!" rubbing his hands with increased satisfaction, "if it ain't a tip-top arrangement?"

Mr. Popkins clutched at his throat as though he was choking to death, and made spasmodic efforts to utter a word of explanation, but his tongue was utterly palsied and failed him in this emergency. Miss Sallie, with a face of the deepest rose color, placed her hand to her mouth, and shouted so as to startle the horses—

"I am going to see Mr. Stiles on business."

Oh, day of blunders! Mr. Stiles was her lawyer, but the unfortunate girl was unaware that a Presbyterian minister had the same dignified cognomen.

"Mr. Stiles?" said our friend; "well, I've heard him well spoken of, but I never expected you, Sallie, a Baptist, to be married by any one but a minister of your own church; but I suppose you gave way to Mr. Popkins, and it shows a downright good disposition."

Miss Sallie gave up in despair, and looked fixedly out of the window, while Mr. Popkins's lips moved occasionally as though he were asking for water, but the unconscious cause of this turmoil sat serene and happy, indulging in an occasional chuckle and knowing glance at Popkins, but at this moment he saw he had arrived at his destination, and wishing his two victims much happiness, he left them to their thoughts.

The human heart is a strange affair, to say the least of it. Had any one advised Mr. Popkins to marry Sallie, he would have rejected the idea immediately, and she herself would have taken it as an insult; but the totally unexpected manner in which the matter had been brought up, made altogether a different affair of it. He stole a glance at Miss Sallie. Her face was turned away, and she was apparently studying nature. She was pretty: Mr. Popkins couldn't deny that. What if—if—and his heart gave a tremendous bound. What a fool he had been all this time! He must try, at any rate, and risk repulse. So without any more hesitation, for our hero was brave, he took Uucle Ben's seat, and said quietly:

"Miss Sallie."

The face turned the eighteenth part of an inch towards him. Not much encouragement, certainly, but a little.

"Miss Sallie," he repeated, "I've been a fool and a brute."

Oh, wise Mr. Popkins! he had started on the direct road to a woman's heart. Either from contrariness or a sense of justice they always take the opposite side. Miss Sallie made up her mind from this moment that he was a gentleman and a Solomon, and she turned her face completely around for him to admire.

"Do you think," he continued, "that we can settle this lawsuit in the sensible manner suggested by Uncle Ben? I do love you, Miss Sallie, and by George I believe I loved you all the time, and never knew it till to-day."

Miss Sallie was completely vanquished, but the answer, although whispered, was heard above the noise of the wheels and the cracking of the driver's whip.

The suit of Popkins vs. Hopkins was dismissed that day. The Baptist minister got a fee, and the people were firmly convinced that Mr. and Mrs. Popkins were the very best hands in the world to keep a secret.

TYPE WORK ON A NEWSPAPER.

The Poughkeepsie Eagle, in an article on "How Mistakes Happen in Newspapers," figures up the number of type used in a newspaper the size of the Eagle at 600,000—that is, the actual number of bits of metal arranged every week, in preparing a newspaper of that size for the press. We suppose few people think of the printing trade as one of the most exact and particular of the handicrafts; but it is. In making type, variations that might be allowed in the finest machinery would render the type useless. It is very rarely that type furnished by two separate foundries can be used together without a great deal of trouble, though they try to make it after the same standard. We read once in a while of a wonderful piece of cabinet work or mosaic work, containing ten, twenty, or fifty thousand pieces, the maker of which has spent months, or even years of labor in producing it, and the people go to see it as a curiosity; but the most elaborate and carefully fitted piece of work of this kind ever made does not compare with that which the printer does, every day, for minuteness of detail and accuracy of fitting. The man who does the first is looked upon as a marvel of skill; and if a hundred of his pieces are put in wrong side up or turned the wrong way, it is not noticed in the general effect, but if the printer in fitting ten times as many pieces together in a single day puts one where another should be or turns one the wrong way, everybody sees it, and is amazed at "the stupid carelessness of those printers."

"That was a good sermon, was it not, that we had last Sunday?" "True for you, yer honor, an illegant one! It done me a power of good intirely." "I'm glad of that. Can you tell me what particularly struck you?" "O, well," scratching his head, "I don't rightly—not exactly know, I—a—I—a where's the use telling lies? Sure I don't remember one single 'dividual word of it, good or bad. Sorry a bit of me knows what it was all about at all." "And yet you say it did you a power of good?" "So it did, sir, I'll stick to that." "I don't see how." "Well, now yer honor, look here. There's my shirt that my wife's after washing; and clean and white it is, by reason of all the water, and soap and starch that's gone through it. But not a drop of 'em all—water, or soap, or starch—has staid in, d'ye see? And that's just the same with me, yer honor, an' it's dried out of me; but all the same, just like my Sunday shirt, I'm the better and cleaner after it."

He came into the sanctum with a large roll of manuscript under his arm, and said, very politely, "I have a little trifle here about the sunset yesterday, which was dashed off by a friend, which I would like inserted, if you have room." "Plenty of room. Just insert it yourself," replied the editor, gently pushing the waste basket toward him.

Wedding celebrations: Three days, sugar; sixty days, vinegar; first anniversary, iron; fifth, wooden; tenth, tin; fifteenth, crystal; twentieth, china; twenty-fifth, silver; thirtieth, cotton; thirty-fifth, linen; fortieth, woolen; forty-fifth, silk; fiftieth, gold; seventy-fifth, diamond.

"I know what those men are doing with the telephone wires," said young knee-breeches, as he gazed upward with his hands in his pockets. "Well, my son, what are they doing with them?" "Shaking the talk out of 'em."

COURTING IN THE OLDEN DAYS.

Thirty years ago Michigan people were a frank and truthful set. Strangers could come here and trade horses with their eyes shut, and breach of promise cases were unknown. Folks meant what they said, and when they gave their word stuck to it.

Exactly thirty years ago this month a widower from New York State appeared in Lansing on business. That same business carried him over to DeWitt, eight miles away. While on the way he stopped at a log farm house to warm his cold fingers. He was warmly welcomed by the pioneer and his wife, both of whom were well along in years, and after some general talk the woman queried:

"Am I right in thinking you are a widower?"

"Yes."

"Did you come out here to find a wife?"

"Partly."

"Did anybody tell you of our Susie?"

"No."

"Well, we've got as bouncing a girl of 22 as you ever set eyes on. She's good-looking, healthy and good-tempered, and I think she'll like your looks."

"Where is she?"

"Over in the woods, here, chopping down a coon tree. Shall I blow the horn for her?"

"No. If you'll keep an eye on my horse I'll find her."

"Well, there's nothing stuck up or affected about Susie. She'll say yes or no as soon as she looks you over. If you want her, don't be afraid to say so."

The stranger heard the sound of her ax and followed it. He found her just as the tree was ready to fall. She was a stout, good-looking girl, swinging the ax like a man, and in two minutes he had decided to say:

"Susie, I'm a widower from New York State; I'm thirty-nine years old, have one child, own a good farm and I want a wife. Will you go back home with me?"

She leaned on the ax and looked at him for half a minute, and then replied:

"Can't say for certain. Just wait till I get these coons off my mind."

She sent the tree crashing to the earth, and with his help killed five coons, which were stowed away in a hollow.

"Well, what do you say?" he asked, as the last coon stopped kicking.

"I'm your'n!" was the reply, "and by the time you get back from DeWitt I'll have these pelts off and tacked up and be ready for the preacher!"

He turned to the house, told the old folks that he should bring a preacher back with him, and at dusk that evening the twain were married. Hardly an hour had been wasted in courting, and yet he took home one of the best girls in the State of Michigan.—Detroit Free Press.

GOOD HABITS.

Men are born with the power of making themselves what they please. The habit of doing nothing well, or poorly, is but another name for willing to do so, for no one does anything which he is not willing to do. A man may habituate his muscles to idleness and inaction till they are worthless in accomplishing any physical good. So he may by inattention and worse. All of this is traceable to the fact that he is willing to do so. And when one wills to become industrious, form better habits, attain to method all he undertakes, commonly called "turning over a new leaf," his bad habits are found to have become a great burden to him. It all began with his will that he should, and hence the importance of comprehension of this will power. A writer has said that the habit of self-control is but the accumulation of continued acts of self-denial for a worthy object, the repeated authority of reason over impulse, judgment over inclination, sense over desire. One who can govern himself with judgment and intelligence, and without fear, has the secret of all true power. The will of self-control does not diminish, but constantly increases in strength, and there is scarcely any limit to its attainments. Too few seem to realize this important truth.

A smooth sea never made a skillful mariner; neither do uninterrupted prosperity and success qualify for usefulness and happiness. The storms of adversity, like the storms of the ocean, arouse the faculties and excite the invention, prudence and skill of the voyager.

No matter how deep a young man's pocket may be, a colored silk handkerchief will inevitably float to the top and flop over, while a soiled linen rag will sink to the bottom like a brick thrown into a mud puddle.

My little boy went to his first tea party when four years and three months old. Upon his hostess asking him how he liked his tea, he replied: "It is very nice; but I think it tastes very much of the water."

Heimgang.

"Heimgang!" So the German people
Whisper when they hear the bell
Tolling from some gray old steeple
Death's familiar tale to tell.
When they hear the organ dirges
Swelling out from chapel dome,
And the singers chanting surges,
"Heimgang!" Always going home.

"Heimgang!" Quaint and tender saying
In the grand old German tongue,
That hath shaped Melancton's praying,
And the hymns that Luther sung;
Blessed is our loving Maker,
That where'er our feet shall roam,
Still we journey toward "God's Acre,"
"Heimgang!" Always going home.

"Heimgang!" We are all so weary,
And the willows, as they wave,
Softly sighing, sweetly, dreary,
Woo us to the tranquil grave.
When the golden pitcher's broken
With its dregs and with its foam,
And the tender words are spoken,
"Heimgang!" We are going home.

JOTTINGS FROM EUROPEAN TRAVEL. NO. 3.

At Friburg, Switzerland, our party passed the night, mostly for the purpose of listening to an organ concert, in the cathedral of St. Nicholas, six hundred years old. The vestibule presents some fine gothic architecture. Upon each side are eight gothic tablets, upon each of which, brought out in bas relief, is the figure of an apostle, or a saint. Above the pointed arches are still smaller arches, filled in with the heads of other saints and angels. Over the door is a quaint picture of the Last Judgment. Here one sees the idea of divine retribution and wrath, as embodied in all the representations of this kind in the Old World, the most striking of which is the Last Judgment by Michael Angelo, in the Sistine Chapel at Rome. Christ is portrayed as the Judge, seated at the right hand of the Father. Myriads of angels are above and around the central figures, most conspicuous of which is Michael, the archangel, who, with his trumpet, summons the dead to arise and stand before their Judge. Those at the right seem to be a happy throng, for they have harps in their hands, crowns upon their heads, and are rendering ascriptions of praise to their redeemer. At the extreme right is a little wicket gate, which a procession of the blessed are about to enter, led by St. Peter, holding a ponderous key in his right hand, which shall usher them into the abode of the Just. Upon the left of the Judge are the lost, writhing in the torments of the Inferno. All the devices of the Inquisition are there, but, most striking of all, is the group in the midst of the leaping and curling tongues of eternal fire, never to be quenched.

Once within the church, the concert was one long to be remembered. The instrument has 70 stops, and 7800 pipes. The organist treated us to the most celebrated musical compositions, the Storm King being the finale, as a matter of course. There are two wonderful suspension bridges at Friburg. One of them, having no towers or pillars, is secured by the sandstone cliffs upon each side of the stream. On all sides are the quaint old watch-towers, and the new town was built almost over the old one. There was much more of interest in Friburg, which we hastily scanned.

A railroad ride of a few hours took us to Lausanne, upon the beautiful Lake of Geneva, called Lake Leman by the Swiss, out of compliment to Lord Byron, who thus christened it in his poem of Childe Harold. In the cathedral of Lausanne are some fine carvings and monuments, but the main interest centers upon what has taken place within its walls. It was consecrated more than six hundred years ago, by Pope Gregory 10th, in the presence of Rudolph of Hapsburg, the founder of the present royal family of Austria, under whose sovereigns have taken place some of the most fearful persecutions of Protestants the world has ever seen. In 1536 there convened here a council, in which Luther took part, which ended in the Canton of Vaud becoming Protestant, which it has ever since remained. In a summer house in the grounds of the Hotel Gibbon, the author of the "Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire" is said to have finished that treatise. While resting here, enjoying the fine view of the lake at our feet, and of the Savoy Alps beyond, it was pleasant to recall sitting upon the steps of the church of Santa Maria in Ara-Celi, at Rome, when the idea of such a composition first suggested itself to the mind of Gibbon. While thus surveying from his perch upon the Capitoline Hill, the Capitol, the Roman Forum, and all that was grandest and most sublime in the Mistress of the World, one cannot wonder that such a lofty theme came to such a mind as he possessed.

From Ouchy, the port of Lausanne, our party embarked upon one of the pretty little lake steamers, bound for the famous castle of Chillon. The day was one of the loveliest, and, as we glided along the placid waters of the lake, our lateen sails floating to the breeze, a volume of "Childe Harold" in our hands, tracing out the scenes of that beautiful poem, we felt that existence was bliss. Vevey, Clarens and Montreux are fraught with romantic associations, both with Lord Byron and Rousseau, but Chillon is the cynosure of all eyes. The grim old castle dates back a thousand years, to the time when it was a single tower, standing over caverns used as political prisons. Founded on a rock, connected by a draw-bridge with the main-land, it is a large building, unique in form, with six towers flanking the main, central one; the latter still containing the bell, which, in the feudal ages, summoned the citizens from far and near, to rendezvous within its walls in times of danger. The living rooms, which were occupied by the Duke of Savoy and his family, command fine views of the lake. How we wished there was time to seat ourselves in the deep recess of the window-seat in the Duchess' room, book in hand, to con the pages of Byron's "Prisoner of Chillon!" But our guide says "come along," and we obey, while he conducts us to the "Hall of Knights," decorated with many a coat of armor and knightly escutcheon; into the vast dining hall, supported by vast oaken pillars, where sounds of ribaldry and mirth were once wont to resound over the festive board; into the chapel, where Protestant service is held every Sabbath; into the judge's room, or hall of justice, from which a dark stair-case leads to the dungeons underneath. Unfortunately for the truth of Byron's poem, these prisons are not below the surface of the lake, but they are sufficiently damp and gloomy to suit the most diabolical of conquerers.

"There are seven columns of gothic mold,
In Chillon's dungeons deep and old.
There are seven columns, massey and gray,
Dim with a dull, imprisoned ray.
A sunbeam, which hath lost its way,
And through the crevice and the cleft
Of the thick wall is fallen and left—
Creeping o'er the floor so damp,
Like a marsh's meteor lamp;
And in each pillar there is a ring,
And in each ring there is a chain;
That iron is a cankering thing,
For in these limbs its teeth remain,
With marks that will not wear away,
Till I have done with this new day."

The first prisoner of rank imprisoned here was Count Wala, a cousin of Charlemagne, who should have been the latter's successor, but political intrigue succeeded in placing him in this gloomy dungeon, and his name is carved with that of Bonivard and many others upon "the seven pillars of gothic mold." The marks of the chains which held the captives are to be seen, worn into the columns, and a hollow in the stone pavement is plainly to be seen around Bonivard's pillar, worn by his weary feet; but a poet's license has filled out the story, as Bonivard was himself the only one of the family here placed in "durance vile." However, could the other names recorded there their tale unfold, the chapter of horrors which Byron has portrayed to us would no doubt be filled out. But even to this loathsome dungeon there comes a ray of light, through a long narrow opening in the wall, through which Byron's "lovely bird, with azure wings," to carol to the poor captive "the sweetest song ear ever heard," came.

But all pleasant things come to an end, and we must bid adieu to Chillon, for the row-boats were in readiness to convey us to our steamer, which we had left at the neighboring chateau of Tenitel. Then we set out upon our sail for nearly the whole length of Lake Leman to the city of Geneva. The three lakes of Switzerland which we had previously seen had a deep green color, but the waters of Lake Leman are an indescribable blue, which a lady of our party aptly characterized as "robin's egg blue." After passing Lausanne, the view was charming. The vineyards and verdure, of a peculiar freshness, clothe the mountain sides, forming the immediate setting of the lake, while to the south, in the distance, towered Mont Blanc, in solitary grandeur, clad in the eternal snow. Charming villas dotted the mountain sides on the lake shore, for many residents of the Northern European cities have their Summer homes here. Just at sunset we reached Geneva, and were domiciled at the Hotel D'Angleterre.

Geneva is by travelers thought to rival Lucerne in the beauty of its situation. Resting at the base of Mount Saleve, it has the Jura Mountains stretching away to the right, while in front is the lake and snow-capped Mont Blanc towering above the near mountains. Built upon either side of the "arrowy Rhone," the outlet of the lake, the two sections of the city joined by six fine bridges, a foot-bridge leads from one of the latter to the little picturesque Rousseau Island, where is the tomb of J. J. Rousseau, embowered in trees. Geneva is justly proud of the distinguished names which adorn her annals: Rousseau, Neckar, and his distinguished daughters, Madam DeStael, were born here, and Lord Byron, Voltaire, Calvin and other lights in Church and State, have lived and labored here. The last resting place of Calvin is within the Cemetery of Plainpalais, but the exact spot cannot be identified, as that stern theologian forbade that any monument should be erected to his memory. Being unable to make a pilgrimage to his tomb, we gladly followed our conductor, (a native of Venice) when, in his vernacular, he said "he wished to show us where Calvin had the Reformation." Accordingly, we visited the cathedral, stood in the very pulpit where Calvin so stoutly inveighed against the church and hierarchy of Rome, and the Lutherans as well. We also sat in his chair. Then we passed on to the house where he lived. Near the latter is the Hotel DeVille, or City Hall. It has an inclined plane leading to its upper stories, up which the government officials were formerly borne in chairs, or on horseback. We visited the room in which the Alabama Claims Commission held its sittings. Tablets upon the walls commemorate the arbitration, and the names of its members are inscribed thereon.

Geneva has fine museums, which have as their distinctive feature relics from the lake cities, which have been procured by divers from the lake beds, where they find the habitations of a race of people belonging to an epoch long anterior to ours. These remains resemble what we see here in our Indian museums. There is a monument near the lake, composed of two figures, Helvetia and Geneva, commemorating the union of Geneva with the Swiss Confederacy of States. One of the finest monuments in Europe is just completed to the Duke of Brunswick, whose benefactions have built and endowed Geneva's museums and schools of science. It bears a likeness to the tomb of the Scaligeis at Verona, Italy. It also reminded us of the Scott monument in Edinburg.

Geneva is renowned for its manufacture of watches and music boxes. The choice little time-pieces which are the delight of some of our party, and sweet strains which are evoked from these mysterious revolutions of the cylinders in our depositories of musical sounds, waft us back to the "Sultana of Switzerland," as Geneva has sometimes been called, for she is the key to Western Switzerland, and the traveler who comes hither from Paris must first become a not unwilling devotee at her shrine.

TO REMOVE GREASE SPOTS.—"J. C. L." writes to the Tribune that grease spots may be removed from any fabric without injury to the most delicate colors by the following method: Take of dry potters' clay, finely powdered, and scatter it lightly over the spot, taking care to cover the spot thoroughly with the powder. Hang the garment near the fire or expose to the sun's rays for an hour or more. Brush off the clay and all traces of the grease will have disappeared.

WHY EGGS ARE SO HIGH.—The egg undergoes total regular segmentation. There is no food yolk, and cleavage goes quite through the egg. There is a true segmentation cavity. Segmentation is rhythmic. There is no invaginate gastrula. The larva leaves the egg as a Nauplius, and passes through a protozœa stage, and a schizopod state. The fifth thoracic segments and appendages are entirely wanting at all stages of development. That is science in an egg-shell.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1881.

THE Illinois Congressmen want President Garfield to make Robert Lincoln a member of his cabinet. His only recommendation, so far as heard from, is that he is a son of the martyr President.

SENATOR DAWES made an extended speech on the Ponca question Monday, and pitched into Secretary Schurz with a good deal of vigor for the course he has pursued, calling him a tyrant and an oppressor of the Indians.

JUDGE DEWEY of Worcester on Monday sent to Gov. Long his resignation of his seat on the bench of the Superior Court, to take effect to-day. The friends of Senator Knowlton of Springfield wo ld be glad to see him appointed to this position, for which he is exceedingly well qualified.

JUDGE BARRETT of the New York supreme court on Thursday refused the injunction asked for against the consolidation of the Western Union, American Union and Atlantic and Pacific telegraph companies, and the stockholders held meetings the same day, at which the formalities of the transfer were completed.

PRESIDENT HAYES on Wednesday sent a message to Congress on the Ponca question, with the report of the commission which recently visited them. He recommends that land be allotted them in severalty, and that they be admitted to the full privileges and responsibilities of citizenship as rapidly as possible.

EVERY State has a favorite son or two whom it would like to see in President Garfield's cabinet, but 38 into 7 you can't, and a majority of them are doomed to disappointment, though all will doubtless indulge in hopes until the cabinet is officially announced, for

"Hope
Is such a bait, it covers any hook."

THERE is a growing opposition to the confirmation of Stanley Matthews as justice of the United States supreme court, which is strengthened by recalling his championship of the Pacific railroads as against the government, when he was in the Senate, while his financial record is very loose. In view of these facts, it is doubtful if his nomination will be confirmed.

THE New York Times announces that the proposed fund of $250,000 for the benefit of Gen. Grant has all been subscribed. Messrs. Mackey of California, Jay Gould and Vanderbilt each subscribed $25,000. The General is believed to be worth at least $100,000, and this, with the income of the $250,000 fund, ought to give him a pretty comfortable living. Now let us have peace.

THE two parties will be closely matched in the next United States Senate, which will consist of 37 Republicans, 37 Democrats and 2 Independents—Senators Davis of Illinois and Mahone of Virginia. Judging from the past, Mr. Davis will vote with the Democrats, and Mahone is likely to do the same a part of the time at least, so that the Democrats will doubtless control the organization of the Senate.

THERE now seems to be little room for hope that the steamer Jeannette, which sailed July 8, 1879, for the Arctic regions, will ever be heard from again. She was last seen on the 3d of September following, since when nothing has been seen or heard of the vessel or the crew. The winter of 1879-80 was exceptionally severe in the northern latitudes, and as the present winter is still colder, the probabilities are that the brave men have succumbed ere this.

NEXT Wednesday is the day for counting the electoral votes, and Congress has not yet agreed upon a rule of procedure. The House wants to give each of the two branches the right to reject the vote of a State, but both branches will probably adopt the Senate bill, which denies the right of the vice president to count the vote, and arranges for passing the vote of Georgia, which was not cast on the day prescribed by law, without deciding whether it is valid or not.

THE Democrats in Congress have been making great pretensions of economy in the past two years, on the strength of their action in cutting down the appropriations right and left, whereby they have crippled the government to an annoying extent. The natural result of their course is now seen in a deficiency bill of $25,000,000, which they must pass to make good the deficiencies in the necessary ordinary expenses of the government, and before which their "economy" fades away as the morning mist before the sun.

IRELAND is ablaze with excitement over the proceedings in the House of Commons this week. The House was in continuous session for 42 hours, from Monday to Wednesday, on account of the obstructive tactics of the Home Rulers, who endeavored to prevent action on the bill for the protection of life and property in Ireland. Dillon, Parnell and the other Home Rulers went so far on Thursday that they were "named" by the speaker, and were all removed from the House by the sergeant-at-arms, and the bill was then passed. Michael Davitt, the boldest champion of Irish independence, was also arrested in Dublin for violating his ticket-of-leave, and it is evident that the government has determined to adopt vigorous measures for the suppression of the disorders in that unhappy country.

Strawberries are wholesaling in New York at $6 a quart, which makes the cost about 10 cents a berry. They are a New Jersey hot house production.

AT THE STATE HOUSE.

There has been a perfect flood of petitions and orders introduced in the Legislature this week, and the committees will have enough before them to keep them busy many weeks if they give the various questions a fair amount of consideration. Among the petitions is one from the Congregational church at Hampden for a change of name to the "First Congregational church at Hampden."

Orders have been introduced instructing the judiciary committee to consider the expediency of striking out that section of chapter 84 of the General Statutes which forbids traveling and attending amusements on the Lord's Day—also section 19 of chapter 165, concerning blasphemy; the expenditure committee to consider increasing the salary of the Hampden county judge and register of probate; the committee on banks to consider the question of reducing the tax on savings bank deposits, and whether the power of trustees of savings banks in making investments should be enlarged; the committee on agriculture to consider whether the killing of any kind of birds on another's land or in the highway at any season, without the consent of the owner, shall be made unlawful.

A bill has been reported to the Senate simplifying the wording of deeds in the conveyance of real estate, which ought to pass.

The House has rejected a bill introduced by Mr. Merritt of Springfield, to pay witness fees to acquitted prisoners whom the judge believes to be innocent.

Representative Phillips of Springfield has introduced a bill providing for a new hospital and repairs on the old one, and for water supply at the Monson State Primary School.

The committee on fisheries gave a hearing Wednesday on the Connecticut River fisheries, and will report a bill allowing the use of a two-inch-mesh net, and extending the time for fishing to July 1.

Wednesday was the last day for the introduction of new business, and the Legislature will now begin its real work of acting upon the matters already brought before it.

Debate has begun in the House on the question of biennial elections. Most of the speakers so far are against the proposed change.

The presidents of the Fitchburg and Troy and Boston railroads are after Manager Gardner, of the State road, with a sharp stick, charging him with incompetency and mismanagement generally. The old Troy and Greenfield road wants to redeem the tunnel property, now that it is in good running shape.

THE House Democrats at Washington attempted last week Friday to put through a bill to pay the widow of a Virginia naval officer the balance of salary due him when, at the beginning of the war, he resigned his commission and went with his State. The bill caused a lively debate, but it finally went over without action. If the Democrats were half as anxious to pay the just claims of the Union soldiers as they are to reward those who deserted their country in her hour of need, their patriotism would be less questioned. As it is, they seem determined to keep their cup of foolishness full to overflowing.

The New England Divorce Reform League is a new Boston society, with such men as Gov. Long, Theodore Woolsey, President Chadbourne and President Chamberlain as members. Whether the object is to discourage divorce altogether, or to merely reform the ways of procuring it does not clearly appear. In an address recently delivered in that city, Rev. Samuel W. Dike said that divorce was a Yankee notion, that was spreading in New England faster than anywhere else. "It is the native American element which generally avails itself of the divorce laws," he declared, "and the increase of licentiousness in New England and the destruction of unborn life are to be attributed to the looseness of morals caused by the relaxation of the marriage bond."

The floods in the Mississippi river have entailed an actual outlay and loss of $230,000,000 since 1849, or a yearly average of $7,669,000. The silt already deposited along the banks is from 60 to 100 feet deep, and these deposits are so unstable that the piers of the St. Louis bridge rest upon bed-rock 70 feet beneath them. Near Cairo, Ill., the bed moved a mile out of its course in one year, and the United States engineers, digging at that point in 1877, struck a sound cottonwood log at a depth of 33 feet. About $7,500,000 has been spent on the river, aside from the jetties, since the formation of the government, out of $70,000,000 appropriated for the rivers and harbors of the country.

The eight-years-old son of a laborer at Newark, Ohio, went coasting against his father's commands, whereupon the father took him to the barn, procured a hickory sapling, split it, put the boy's thumbs inside, nailed the sapling tight where split, then with it lifted the boy up on the side of the barn and nailed him, keeping him in this crucified state from 4 o'clock in the afternoon till 10 at night, when passers-by heard the lad's groans and released him.

The recent accident on the Erie railroad, by which several postal clerks were burned to death, resulted in the adoption of an amendment to the post office bill, which requires railroad companies hauling postal cars to provide safety stoves for such cars and axes and saws, for the better protection of the clerks in case of accident.

Two brass field pieces which were captured at Hilton Head, S. C., in November, 1861, by the Union forces, were last week returned to the Beaufort artillery company by the navy department.

Henry Bennett, station agent at Webster, went to Worcester one day last week and has not been seen since.

A movement now in progress to secure the services of Mr. Harley Newcomb of Boston to give instruction to our citizens in vocal music promises to be successful. It is encouraged by some of our best people, and all will acknowledge the need of such service as he is capable of rendering. Palmer is large enough for a sound choral society, and ought to have one. Mr. Newcomb will visit Palmer next Thursday, and if applicants are sufficiently numerous will organize a class at once.

Some of the workmen in Marchant & Brigham's hat shop thought they would have a little fun the other day, and putting some powder in a piece of lead pipe ran it through a hole in the floor to scare the people in the room above. It did not go off readily, and a young man named Gates, seeing a little smoke, looked down to find the cause, when the powder flashed, filling his face and eyes so that he could not work for two or three days. The pipe burst at the other end at the same time, or it would have been a still more serious joke for him.

Wednesday was Candlemas Day, and it was one of the coldest days of the winter, the thermometer ranging from 6 to 16 below zero in the morning, and getting but 3 or 4 degrees above at noon. The old proverb says:

If Candlemas Day be dry and fair,
The half o' winter's to come and mair.
If Candlemas Day be wet and foul,
The half o' winter's gane at Yule.

It was "dry and fair" with a vengeance; so it would seem, if the rhyme is true, that we shall need more than "half the wood and half the hay" to carry us through the cold weather which is still to come.

Samantha Allen has "writ" a new book, this time about her "Wayward Pardner," the well-known Josiah, in which she tells of some of his weaknessess, and incidentally touches upon a good many social and political peculiarities of people in general. Samantha appears to grow more keen and witty with advancing years, and people who have read "My Opinions and Betsey Bobbet's," or "Samantha at the Centennial" will want her latest work, which will be found full of droll wit and keen satire. Mrs. C. E. W. Buss is now canvassing the place for the sale of the book.

Remember the lecture at Wales Hall next week Friday night by Rev. L. T. Chamberlain of Norwich. Mr. Chamberlain is a close observer and an excellent speaker, and the interest of his lecture is attested by the fact that he has already been called to give it the second time in several places. This is the first lecture of the season here, and will deserve a full attendance.

By request he will repeat his sermon to heads of families, delivered in Three Rivers a few weeks ago, and give his farewell address. Mr. Leonard's labors here and at Three Rivers have been greatly blessed, and his early departure will be generally regretted by all who are interested in the progress of the work to which he has given himself with such untiring devotion and energy.

That was a surprising surprise party the other night. A number of ladies escorted two young men to the house of the one to be surprised, and they "took the cake," the young men did, on their arms. Four more young men joined the party later in the evening, all being determined to enjoy themselves, and few parties with so small a representation of the "horrid men" are more merry.

Quite an extended article appeared in the Republican of last Sunday under the head of "Northampton Gossip," by a special correspondent, in reference to the case of "Crazy Jim," citing stories of terrible cruelty, of his being left in a room at the poor-house without any window through a very cold night in December, and of his being put in the lock-up one of the coldest nights without any fire, after 9 o'clock, and again that the man who took him to the hospital had to hold him up—all of which our officials affirm are without a shadow of truth.

Six years ago our boot manufacturer, being out of business, opened a shop for the manufacture of youth's and children's boots, not anticipating keeping more than one or two hands at most, but the business has steadily grown from the manufacture of less than 2400 pairs the first year, to over 17,000 pairs in the year just closed. There have been manufactured in the six years in round numbers more than 53,000 pairs of boots and shoes. Owing to the ill health of Mr. Eddy the business has been at nearly a stand still since the first of December, but now he has the shop in good running order, with a fine stock of leather and a full complement of men, and with prospects of a successful business season to come. So mote it be.

The monthly dues from members have been reduced from $1.50 each to 50 cents.

Editor Standard: — Mr. Eddy, the naturalist, gave another of his parlor entertainments at Mr. Ed. Sagendorph's on Monday evening. It seems to be the great desire of this gentleman to impart to others the knowledge which is so gratifying to himself, in going out of his way at any time and to please any one who may appreciate his efforts. This shows the man, as well as the lover of animated nature. Mr. Eddy has a large and fine collection of specimens which he takes delight in exhibiting and throwing light upon, not only through the ordinary means, but from his own luminous brain. The wing of a wasp, with its fang-like catches; the section of a hog's hoof, the intricate meshes of which were intensely beautified from the "polarized light;" the louse, taken from a common housefly; the scales of eels and fishes, as well as the wonderful and varied variety of diatomes, all added greatly to our instruction and pleasure, and we felt we had learned something from the great book of nature, open to all, but read by only a few. May Mr. Eddy long be spared to cheer his friends and neighbors with similar disseminations. * * *

WEATHER NOTES.

This remarkable Winter has been giving the country another taste of its bitterness the past week. A heavy snow-fall began in the West on Monday, continuing for two days in Wisconsin, and gradually extending east, prevailing on Tuesday from Michigan to Maryland and through the Middle States, and accompanied by a cold and piercing wind which piled up the snow and delayed railroad trains generally. Some of the western railroads have been employing hundreds of men in clearing their tracks. No trains left Cleveland, O., Tuesday, until evening, the storm being very severe at that point. At Chicago trains were greatly delayed, and on some of the Wisconsin roads freight trains have been stopped entirely for a few days. The storm was very severe along the Jersey coast, and the British steamer Roraima went ashore at Shark river inlet, and lies in a dangerous position, but refuses assistance. Travel on the Sound and in New York harbor was greatly impeded by the ice. The storm also extended through the South in the shape of rain and sleet, with low temperature.

California and British Columbia have experienced of late the heaviest rain storm known since 1861. Rain began falling on the 28th ult., and rivers have overflowed their banks inundating miles of territory and destroying an immense amount of property. In some portions of California, especially in the Sacramento valley, the floods have been the most serious since the country was settled by the whites. At Shasta the enormous quantity of 81.4 inches of rain has fallen this season. The wheat lands will suffer untold damage if the water does not run off quickly. The damage to property will run up into the millions. On Thursday the rain-fall was reported to be increasing, from the Sierra Nevadas to the ocean, and rain fell in Shasta at the rate of nearly an inch an hour, while there were several cloud-bursts in that section. The city of Sacramento is seriously threatened with an inundation.

In Minnesota, for the first time in the history of the State, hundreds of prairie settlers have been compelled this winter to burn their furniture, farm implements, floors out of their houses, stables and out-houses to keep themselves from freezing. It is believed that 3,000,000 tons have been secured at a cost of $750,000, or 25 cents a ton. In 1880 only 15,000 tons were secured, and in 1879 2,000,000 tons. The quality of the ice is exceptionally fine; it is from 12 to 14 inches thick, and is as clear as crystal.

Literary and Musical Notes.

Good Company, number seventeen, contains an instalment of "Rose and the Doctor," the serial by Ellen W. Olney, which will be found of marked interest and in which the "plot thickens." There is the usual complement of fiction complete in the number. Two of the sketches are about the experience of an investor in Arizona mines, and Achmet, an Egyptian lady's maid. Mr. John Burroughs has a collection of brief papers on several topics. The more substantial material includes the substance of a paper on the higher education of women which was read at Smith College by President D. C. Gilman of Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore; an article on "Ireland and Irishmen," by Rev. Dr. G. H. Hepworth, one of the committee for the distribution of the New York Herald relief fund in Ireland; a graphic summary of the career of the African explorer, Henry M. Stanley; and a paper showing up some of the abuses connected with patents and the United States patent right laws. Of special timeliness are "Winter," by E. S. Gilbert, and an article on George Eliot. Springfield, Mass.; $3 a year.

The lively "Bernhardt Schottische," (40 cts.) with picture title; "Les Animos Schottische," (35 cts.) by C. H. Wilbour; and "Witches Dance," (30 cts.) by G. Ausgabe, make a pleasant trio of piano pieces. There is also a good number of The Musical Record, with its usual two pieces of sheet music (mailed for 6 cents).

There will undoubtedly be a great demand for Rev. E. P. Roe's story in the Congregationalist. As may be seen by the advertisement, it commences Feb. 9, and will run through nine or ten months. Mr. Roe is one of our most popular authors.

SPURTS of disgusting mucous, snuffles, deafness, crackling sensations in the head, fœtid breath, nasal twang and tickling in the throat, are signs of Catarrh. Dr. Wei De Meyer's recent discovery of a constitutional treatment by absorption is the only remedy which has ever yet really cured this terrible malady. Wei De Meyer's Catarrh Cure is sold by druggists, or delivered by D. B. Dewey & Co., 46 Dey street, N. Y., at $1.50 a package. Descriptive pamphlets mailed free. 1m46

Hernia is a very common trouble, and a very disagreeable one. A good easy setting truss is a difficult article to procure. The Willard Truss, advertised in another column, is so arranged that the wearer can move in any position without the least inconvenience; the hips are also relieved from the pressure common to other trusses. The afflicted will certainly do well to call upon Mr. Streeter, at the Westboro Hotel, on Monday, the 7th day of February, and see the truss for themselves. It is worth examining, if nothing more.—Westboro Chronotype.

LADIES, DELICATE AND FEEBLE.—Those languid, tiresome sensations, causing you to feel scarcely able to be on your feet; that constant drain that is taking from your system all its former elasticity; driving the bloom from your cheeks; that continual strain upon your vital forces, rendering you irritable and fretful, can easily be removed by the use of that marvelous remedy, Hop Bitters. Irregularities and obstructions of your system are relieved at once, while the special cause of periodical pain is permanently removed. Will you heed this? See "Proverbs." 2w46

Kitchen Economy Again.

LATER TESTS MADE BY THE GOVERNMENT CHEMIST.

The analytical chemist for the Indian Department of the Government, Dr. Edward G. Love, has made further analysis of baking powders, and this time of samples both of which were purchased by Dr. Love himself in open market.

As carbonic acid gas is the bread leavening power generated by the admixture of cream of tartar and bi-carbonate of soda, the following, copied from Dr. Love's certificate of analysis of the comparative yields of this gas by the powders examined is of interest:

Name of the Baking Powder.	Available carbonic acid gas, cubic inches per each ounce of powder.
"Cleveland's Superior".....	118.2
"Royal".....	116.2

The sample of Cleveland's Baking Powder previously analyzed, with the result shown in the original article on "Kitchen Economy," was furnished to Dr. Love by the Royal Baking Powder Company.—N. Y. Tribune, Jan. 28, 1881.

Westboro, Jan. 25, 1881.

Willard's Patent Truss seems to possess some principles of mechanism well calculated to reach a large number of cases of Hernia hitherto controlled by instruments in common use. Persons so afflicted and disappointed can safely rely on the integrity of Mr. Streeter, the agent, in his guarantee of perfect success. WM. CURTIS, M. D.

I have seen the working of Willard's Truss among my patients. I think it a superior instrument, and well calculated mechanically to answer its purpose. It embraces some new principles, and is worn with ease and confidence by all I know who use it. RUFUS WOODWARD.

"A Joy Forever."

We passed from out the dazzling light,
We left the rustling throng of dancers;
Miss Smith had said to me: "We might,
I'm not thin', sit out the Lancers."
And, wandering on, we lost our way—
A country house is most perplexing—
Miss Smith was filled with sweet dismay,
And closer clung—'twas very—vexing.

We rested at a window seat,
My hand detained a hand half willing;
We murmured of the floor, the heat,
And other things as wildly thrilling.
Some mistletoe o'erhead entwined
Gave rise to arch but tempting banter,
I kissed her—lost my peace of mind—
And got a piece of hers instanter.

She stamped her foot, her bosom rose
And fell with maidenly vexation;
She said—but what she said—Lord knows,
For I was lost in admiration.
But there she stood, a deer at bay,
A picture for a master's sketching;
I soothed her, as a mortal may,
And thought she never looked so fetching.

My deeds were rash, my words insane—
At length we could no longer tarry—
And when we joined the dance again
Miss Smith was Kate and I was Harry.
Ten years' possession has not tired
My love, but I'm in this position:
The tantrums which I once admired
Have palled from frequent repetition.

THE BIG WORDS OF SCIENCE.

Monstrosities of diction are not confined to chemical science, but are to be found in physics as well as metaphysics. We recently gave some samples of the extraordinary and absurd length to which the names of certain organic salts had grown, and we may now add the following choice specimen of imagery (from a recent paper by Sir William Thompson) to illustrate the grand style in modern natural philosophy. "The stream-lines," says the distinguished Glasgow physicist, "are as represented in the diagram, in which the region of translational-velocity greater than wave-propogational velocity is separated from the region of translational-velocity less than wave-propogational velocity by a cat's-eye border of elliptic whirls." The curious mixture of homely simile and abstract terminology in this passage is extremely ludicrous. Its obscurity is, however, surpassed by Mr. Herbert Spencer's famous "Formula of Evolution," which runs: "Evolution is a change from an indefinite, incoherent, homogeneity to a definite, coherent, heterogeneity, through continuous differentiations and integrations," which being interpreted into plain English by Mr. Kirkman, the mathematician, means: "Evolution is a change from a nohowish, untalkaboutable allalikeness to a somehowish, and in-general-talkaboutable not-all-alikeness, by continuous some-thing-elsefications and stick-togetherations." As a clever travesty on the above cacophonous mystification of Mr. Herbert Spencer, which, like the language of diplomacy, conceals the meaning it ought to express, we have Mr. Kirkman's "Formula of Universal Change," which is: "Change is a perichoretical synechy of pamparadagmatic and porroteroporeumatical differentiations and integrations." After such pedantry as this, the clown in Shakespeare's "Twelfth Night" who "did impeticos thy gratillity" is absolutely nowhere.—London Globe.

An American millionaire not long since visited Europe. A traveled friend asked him what he had seen, mentioning all the noted sights; among other places he asked him if he had seen the Dardanelles. "Oh, yes," replied old money-bags; "they dined with us the last night we were in Paris."

An editor may write himself "we" in his editorials, and feel therefore doubly proud and doubly strong; but when he gets home to dinner an hour or so late, and forgets to bring something home to make that dinner, he doesn't feel any bigger than one-fourth of one person.

And now the seaside hotel-keeper sits down and counts his gains, and meditatively says to himself: "Is 275 per cent profit enough to warrant me in running the old shebang another year, or shall we have a terrible conflagration in November? I guess I'll conflag."

"No, as I understand it these cold waves come from the vast deserts of snow in the Siberian plains, and radiate thence over the globe, but principally in this direction." "Well, why the dickens don't they stay there, then?" "Why it's too cold, idiot."

A little girl of 12 years, the daughter of a clergyman, was asked: "Sadie, does your papa ever preach the same sermon twice?" After thinking a moment, Sadie replied: "Yes, I think he does, but I think he hollers in different places."

"Will you have your oysters scalloped?" asked a Galveston waiter of a green customer from the interior. "Have the oysters scalped? No, but you can scalp the butter, if you want to. It needs it the worst kind."

"Eye peeping" is the new game. Two holes are made in a screen. The performers stand behind it and place their eyes in the holes, while the persons in front guess to whom the eyes belong.

A Philadelphia merchant advertised, "Boy Wanted," and the very next day got one weighing twelve pounds. "This," says the Oil City Derrick, "shows the advantage of advertising."

A new verb has appeared. A paper speaks of a convivial citizen who wa "shuttered" home. No doubt when his wife began to scold him next day he "shutter" up.

In the order of seniority the Emperor of Brazil heads the list of reigning sovereigns. He ascended the throne in 1831, when he was only six years of age.

Many a boy who handles a billiard cue with skill, cannot get the hang of a snow shovel.

HOW OILCLOTH CARPETS ARE MADE

Burdette visited the oilcloth manufactory at Salem, N. J., and communicates his impressions to the Hawkeye as follows:

All the burlap on and of which oilcloth is made is manufactured in Dundee, Scotland. It is made from an India grass. It is sized first, when it is ready for painting. It isn't painted with brushes, but with a knife, a great long knife. The end of the burlaps is passed under the blade. When paint is ladled on the burlaps by the gallon, machinery takes hold of it and draws it between a roller and the knife, and the blade scrapes off all the superfluous paint as it passes through. No brush could lay the color on so evenly. They painted sixty yards of burlap in a minute. Then when it is dry, it is sand-papered by machinery, and other coats of paint go on. From four to nine coats of paint are put on, according to the quality of the oilcloth. It dries in a week, when it is ready for printing. This is the most interesting process.

All the blocks from which oilcloth is printed in these, and with few exceptions, all the manufactories in the United States, are made in Hallowell, Maine. The block is about eighteen inches square, and is made of three pieces; the inside block is pine, and outside blocks are maple. The printing surface is sawed across at right angles with very fine saws, which work automatically, and don't need any superintendence after they have been started.

When it reaches the factory, the surface of the block looks like a box of matches; the designer then paints his design on paper, lined out in tiny squares, a perfect duplicate of the block. In copying the design on the block, the operator works one block for each color, and the copying is doing with a chisel, the operator cutting away all the little squares made by the saws, except those covered by the pattern. It is like worsted work, "four squares to the right, three straight up, five to the right, three down and four to the left." The same old "three greens and then a brown" business.

The designer is limited to few colors and has to make the most of his combinations. These blocks are then fitted with handles, and the printers go to work. The palette is a great revolving table with pads of the different paints laid on it. Two men work at each table, and the operation of printing is like stamping letters at the mailing table in the post office. The printer slaps the block on the pad, then strikes it on the oilcloth—first the white, say, and there is a scattering, meaningless picture of little white squares; then the red is stuck on, more little white dots that look like nothing; then the green, and you think you can see something like a leaf; then another shade, and another, until you see a cluster of leaves and birds in a figure outlined by a very distinct color, and the printing is ready for the "masher," which is a block just like the other, only all the squares left on, not one struck out. This is pressed down on the figures by a hand press, and the printing is pressed down evenly and smoothly.

If the printer wants to give a square of "pegged" appearance to the finish of the oilcloth, the masher is sawed both ways, in the bunch of matches style. If he wants to "line" the finish, the "masher" he uses has only been sawed one way, and the oilcloth has a "lined" appearance on the surface. This work is all done by hand, guided only by gauges, but so perfectly is it done that the figures never lap, and you will have hard work finding where the blocks join on your oilcloth. They print each day, at each table, 120 yards of oilcloth. Then the cloth goes into the "ice house" to dry. The ice house is frozen by steam.

Superintendent Dunn very kindly told me to put on my overcoat before I went in. I put it on, and when I got in there the thermometer marked 175 degrees above, and still agoing. I took off my overcoat. The cloth is then ready to varnish. This is done with brushes, fourteen brushes, which a man works with a crank. Here in these works they varnish 14,000 yards a week. And if you want to know any more about oilcloth, write to Salem. I can make it myself, but I haven't time to write any more about it.

The settlement of Lower Oregon is going on at an unprecedented rate. A German couple has recently arrived with fourteen children, the mother being about 25 years old. They were married in the Fall of 1870, and the following Summer their married life was blessed with twins, both girls. Less than two years later the woman, who was then 18 years old, gave birth to four children, three girls and a boy, the latter living only a few days. In the Summer of '74 three more girls registered at that humble hearth, and in 1875 a boy arrived solitary and alone. Seven years after marriage the arrival of another cluster of four, this time two boys and two girls, was an event that created some consternation, and two years ago two more little flaxen-haired girls came to the fortunate couple.

The crown of England contains precious stones worth an aggregate of $500,000. There are 377 diamonds worth from $178 to $10,000 each, besides a number of smaller diamonds, a large quantity of pearls and some other gems. The average value of the diamonds is something more than $1000 each.

Play spades if you would win potatoes; play clubs if you would deal with a ruffian; play hearts if you would win friendship; play diamonds if you would win a woman.

BOGUS CERTIFICATES.—It is no vile drugged stuff, pretending to be made of wonderful foreign roots, barks, &c., and puffed up by long bogus certificates of pretended miraculous cures, but a simple, pure, effective medicine, made of well-known valuable remedies, that furnishes its own certificates by its cures. We refer to Hop Bitters, the purest and best of medicines. See "Truths" and "Proverbs," in another column.

Consumption or debility in its first stages promptly assisted by Malt Bitters.

PRESCRIBED BY PHYSICIANS AND DRUGGISTS FOR NEARLY FIFTY YEARS.

The Shaker Sarsaparilla is just what it purports to be.—Dixi Crosby, M. D. I have long prescribed it, and think it a most valuable medicine.—Jeremiah Blake, M. D., Gilmanton, N. H. Have known it for nearly half a century. Our confidence in it is in no way impaired.—Carlton & Hovey, Druggists, Lowell. I speak with confidence of it, having prescribed it for eighteen years.—S. M. Dinsmor, M. D. Francestown, N. H. Give me the Shakers' Sarsaparilla in preference to all others.—C. A. Guilmette, M. D., Boston. I have the most unbounded confidence in its healing and renovating properties.—Wm. R. Preston, Druggist, Portsmouth, N. H. I consider it the best preparation made.—A. G. Wilbor, Druggist, Boston.

Do not fail to make a trial of this great Blood Purifier, Appetizer and Tonic, the first and best of all medicines called Sarsaparilla, which is prepared from selected SHAKER ROOTS, HERBS AND BERRIES by the CANTERBURY SOCIETY OF SHAKERS, and is beyond all comparison the purest, safest and most effective family medicine in the world. People will Talk.

You may go through this world, but 'twill be very slow,
If you listen to all that is said as you go,
You'll be worried and fretted and kept in a stew,
For meddlesome tongues must have something to do,
And people will talk.

If quiet and modest, you'll have it presumed
That your humble position is only assumed;
You're a wolf in sheep's clothing, or else you're a fool,
But don't get excited, keep perfectly cool,
For people will talk.

And then, if you show the least boldness of heart,
Or a slight inclination to do your own part,
They will call you an upstart, conceited and vain,
But keep straight ahead, don't stop to explain,
For people will talk.

If threadbare your dress, or old-fashioned your hat,
Some one will surely take notice of that,
And hint rather strong that you can't pay your way,
But don't get excited whatever they say,
For people will talk.

If you dress in the fashion don't think to escape,
For they criticise then in different shape;
You're ahead of your means, or your tailor's unpaid,
But mind your own business, there's nought to be made,
For people will talk.

Now the best way to do is to do as you please,
For your mind, if you have one, will then be at ease.
Of course you will meet with all sorts of abuse,
But don't think to stop them—it ain't any use,
For people will talk.

THE COINERS OF KANSAS.

Several years ago, and shortly after the remonetization of silver, counterfeiting received a wonderful impetus, and the West and South especially were flooded with bogus coin.

The large floating population and the wildness of the border country rendered the task of unearthing the coiners a hard one, but after several seasons of persistent and stealthy work, the United States Detective Service became satisfied as to the location of at least one gang of the "sharps;" and Jack Densmore, an experienced agent, was instructed to visit the State, (Kansas) ingratiate himself with the counterfeiters, and learn of their haunts and habits.

The duty was a dangerous one, but the man selected to perform it had faced danger, and even death, too often among Eastern criminals to hesitate a moment; and so it happened that, on a certain hazy September evening, Densmore, disguised as a Dutch peddler, dropped from the westward bound train on the K. P. road, at the little station of Black Wolf, in Kansas.

For a moment he gazed after the retreating cars, then turned, and in broken English inquired of the station agent the route to Wildwood Tavern.

"I vas what you call strange mid dis part of de koundry," said the peddler, smiling; "but a frient of mine up de river, he say go to Vildvood Tavern und you sold lots of goots in dot koundry."

"Wall, Dutchy, I don't reckon ye'll do much trade, but I kin tell ye the road, ef yer going."

So saying, the rough Westerner gave the necessary directions, and in the gloaming, Densmore disappeared.

"I'll try every house from here to Wildwood," muttered he, when he was out of hearing, "but I'll find Price's. That's the name—Price. And when that is found, look out! If I can capture Dick Price, my fortune is made."

At nine o'clock, Carl—for so he called himself—sought shelter at a settler's cabin by the roadside, and paid for supper, lodging and breakfast with gaudy lace.

At noon he paused again to eat and trade, and still again many times more during the afternoon.

Before night he had heard the name of Price; and before night, too, several pieces of counterfeit coin had been passed upon him.

He was nearing his game.

It was a little after sundown, and with weary tread Densmore was climbing up a long hill, where the straggling road was fringed with bushes and woods, when a step startled him, and a moment later a slender boy was at his side.

"How you vas, little feller?" said the detective. "Dose vas a nice noight."

"Yes, sir," said the youth, looking at him sharply. "Where are you going?"

"Me going? Oh, I vas going to sell de tings in mine pack. I vas going to get rich," and the peddler chuckled.

"No, I mean to-night. Where are you going to stay? This road stops up in the woods here," said the boy.

Densmore paused.

"De road stops! Py schimminy! Den dot road got himself lost at de last turn, thought this road vent through de voods to de place you calls the Tavern, hey?"

"Oh, you mean Wildwood Tavern. That is over that way. It's five miles from here."

"Py schimminy! five miles; I neffer get dere to-night. I sleep mit dese voods," sighed poor Carl, and he began to unstrap his pack.

The boy eyed him again sharply. Then he said:

"No, you needn't sleep in the woods. I live at the end of this road. Come with me. You can stay at our house, I guess."

"Ah, dot vas a goot poy; dot vas nice; und I get some supper, too, don't it?"

"I reckon," replied the boy.

Re-shouldering his pack, the two continued to follow the road, the youth leading, until, half a mile further on, a cabin appeared in the shadows.

"Here is my house," said the guide. "Go to the door, and I'll run and tell father," and he disappeared toward the barn.

Densmore looked sharply about him. This was Price's. A long, low cabin, strongly built, with small, barred windows, a barn back of it, dreary woods upon all sides. A regular den. The detective shuddered.

"A bad hole; yet he is the chief. If I can catch him, with the dies, it will destroy the gang."

Then with a resolution to succeed or perish, he moved toward the door.

As he raised his hand to knock, it was suddenly opened. A heavily-built, and heavily-bearded woodsman stood before him—a man with skill and cunning in his face, and a desperate threatening courage in his eyes—a devil to dare, a giant to do—Dick Price. He glowered upon the peddler, shading the flickering torch he held with one brawny hand, while his piercing glance searched Densmore's face.

"Vhat d'ye want?"

"You vas de leetle poy's pa? Dot vas goot. I want somethings to eat and somethings to sleep. De leetle poy said so." And with simple naturalness Carl pushed aside the mighty doorman, entered the cabin, threw his pack upon the floor, and with a sigh of relief dropped upon a low bench near the fire.

"Ah, dot vas goot."

For an instant anger flamed in Price's face; but before he could speak, a back door opened, and a woman, young, lithe and charming, entered, and with a glance at the man before her, said:

"Ah, this is the peddler Will spoke to me of. He lost his way, dear," she continued, going to Price, and laying her hand upon his arm, "and Will met him on the road and asked him to stay with us to-night. It is all right."

The passion died from the man's face; the voice of the woman thrilled Carl. This girl and the boy who had guided him were one. She was the spy of the gang.

"So yer a peddler, eh?" said the host advancing, "and lost yer way? Wall, ye are welcome to our fire and fare; but I tell ye a little more ceremony will be better with Dick Price next time. I was nigh shakin' ye;" and he smiled grimly.

Carl smiled too, childlike and bland, and said, "Yaw." The host and his companion were amused.

"Where's the boy?" asked Price.

"He went to the barn. He was too tired to eat, and will not be in to-night," said the woman, as she busied herself preparing the evening meal.

Carl was sure now that woman and boy were one.

A plain but plentiful supper was served, after which the peddler and his host drew before the open fire with their pipes. Naturally the conversation turned upon trade, and Dutchy very willingly told of his success, and even showed the silver which he had gathered during the day. Price picked a piece of it from his hand.

"That 'ere's bad." he said.

"Vat! Pad?" and Carl leaned forward excitedly. "Oh, you vas foolin', dis vill pass," he continued, examining the coin.

"It may pass, but it's counterfeit, all the same; I'm sure of it," said Price.

"Vell, neffer mind. It vas goot enough for me. I only vish I had a thousand dollars of it."

"Wall, I reckon ye could get it," said Price, resuming his pipe. "I heard a feller say to-day there was lots of it around."

"Py schimminy! I vould like to get it. It vas good effery vare I go."

"I know a feller what's got some of the stuff," said Price, in a low tone. "But he lives a mile from here. Ye could buy it of him, I reckon."

"For how much?" asked Carl.

"Oh, maybe one-half," returned the other. "It's bad stuff to handle, ye know, and I never touch it."

"One-half! You mean two dollars for one? Py schimminy! I vill give two hundred tollars for four, and got myself rich!" cried the peddler.

Price smiled.

"How can ye pay for it?"

"Neffer mind. I know. Show me de feller vat's got it to sell, und I pay him mit it," said Carl.

"Wall," said the host, rising, "I'll find him for ye in the morning. Do you want to turn in?"

"Turn in?"

"Go ter bed—ter sleep, I mean."

"Oh, yaw! I vas tired myself oud to-night."

A moment's consultation with the woman, and Price called the peddler to follow. Carl picked up his pack and climbed the ladder that led into the loft. There was a shake-down on the floor.

"Thar. It's not the finest bed-room in the world, but ye'll sleep. Good-night," said Price, laughing.

"Goot-night," returned Carl.

The other disappeared.

Densmore heaved a sigh.

"It's hard playing Dutch," he muttered.

Then he opened his pack, and from it drew two heavy revolvers, a bowie-knife, three pairs of handcuffs, and the star of the United States secret service.

"I may have work before morning, and these are good bed-fellows," thought he.

He removed his coat, blew out the candle, and lay down, his mind busy with the events of the day, and in forming some plans for the morrow.

While thus engaged, the sound of a door stealthily opened attracted his attention, and a moment later he heard men's voices below. Quietly leaving his bed he crept to a knot-hole in the floor and listened.

"But the peddler."

It was the woman's voice.

"Never mind him," replied Price. "Ned," he continued, apparently addressing the newcomer, "we've a customer up stairs—a Dutch peddler—and he wants four hundred. I'll bring him to ye in the morning. He'll buy—"

The door opened a second time. Pressing his face close to the floor he found that he could both see and hear. Three sharp-looking, roughly-dressed men entered.

"Ha? all here," said Price, in a low tone. "That's good. I want half a thousand of the queer to-night, fer we kin send to the Tavern to-morrow, and the chap up above wants some. Did you bring the dies, Bray?"

The man addressed shook his head.

"I haven't been home, and jest come from Elkhorn. Send Nettie. My old woman will give them to her."

Price turned to the girl.

"Are you afraid to go, Net?"

"Afraid?" she laughed, and touched her bosom, just drawing the butt of a pistol into sight. "Afraid, Dick? Ye know better nor that."

"Wall, then, my gal, if ye go to Bray's an' get the dies, it will help us; for while the boys are coining, I will stay on watch and mill the hundred we ran yesterday. Ye'll be back in an hour."

"Yes, dear."

And throwing a heavy cloak about her, and incasing her head in a deep hood, the girl opened the door and disappeared into the night.

Price turned to the gang.

"Boy's, go below, fire up, and prepare the rest of the metal. I'll stay here, and when Net comes with the dies we'll coin. I want a full load to-night, for we're almost out. Here, give me a lift."

As he ceased speaking he seized a heavy iron bar and thrust it beneath the hearth-stone. The others joined hands with him, and with desperate effort, the five slowly raised the great stone.

Beneath it appeared a door, secured by long iron bolts. These being shot, and the trap raised, a flight of steps were seen.

The four strangers descended, one carrying a lantern, and Price dropped the door behind them. Then, opening a sort of hidden closet, he drew from it a box of rough silver coin and a milling machine, with which he began to work.

Densmore breathed hard.

"Trapped!" he whispered—"trapped! The gang complete! And now for work."

Noiselessly he arose and approached the ladder. In either pocket were his pistols, in his hand a pair of bracelets, on his breast his star.

At the top of the ladder he paused, struck his foot against the floor, and coughed. There was a quick stir below.

"Mr. Brice! Mr. Brice! Vas you dere?"

A half-growl from below answered him.

"I vas sick, Mr. Brice—I vas so hot as neffer vas! I vant a leetle vater, Mr. Brice, if you please, Mr. Brice."

"What the—" then came an oath. "Lie still, ye Dutch fool; and I'll bring ye water. Don't come here."

"Oh, no, Mr. Brice! But some vater, Mr. Brice, for God's sake! I vas burned alive!"

There was a moving about the room, a patter of dipper and pail, and then Price approached the ladder. Densmore breathed hard. The steps came nearer, nearer; they mounted the ladder. He crouched, waiting. An instant more, and the bearded face of Price appeared above the opening in the door, and his right hand was raised, holding a tin cup of water.

"Here, Dutchy—ye're cursed hard to take care of—here's yer drink."

Carl's arm was outstretched; but, as he touched the dipper, there came a sharp click, and the handcuff closed about the wrist of the coiner, and, at the same moment, the cold muzzle of a heavy Colt's revolver pressed against his forehead, and the voice of the detective hissed in his very ear:

"Not a sound, or I'll kill you! Up with your other hand."

The man was fairly caught and he knew it! The color fled from his bronzed face, leaving it ashen-hued; a cold sweat gathered in beads upon his brow; the prison door yawned before him; but one glance into the deep eyes of the detective were enough, and with a shudder and a groan he allowed the handcuffs to be clasped about his other wrist.

"And now go down; without noise, too," said Densmore, "or—"

Price obeyed; and as he turned upon the floor below, the detective was at his side.

"Sit there," and he pointed towards the table, "with your back to the door."

Again the coiner obeyed, bowing his head upon his hands. Then Densmore crept to the trap, closed it and shot the heavy bolts.

Without raising his head, Price whispered: "They'll smother."

"They must run their chances," replied Densmore, coldly.

So saying, he crept near to the cabin door, and waited. He must have the woman, the spy, the last and best of all the gang.

The moments passed, the hour was drawing to a close, and the detective listened with bated breath for his coming victim, when suddenly, without a sound, the door opened, and Nettie entered.

As she did so, Densmore stepped forward and would have laid his hand upon her shoulder; but in a single glance the girl comprehended all, and with a wild shriek she sprang from him, the dies dropping from her arms as she did so, while Price started from his seat and joined her. And then again the detective found himself facing his enemies, one of them now armed, for the woman had drawn a pistol.

But there was no struggle. With nerves as tense as steel, and a deadly light in the clear, blue eyes, Carl leveled his heavy weapons, one at each of the figures before him, and in low, cool tones said:

"Up with your hands! In the name of the national government I arrest you as counterfeiters! Quick!"

The last word was addressed to the woman, for in her eyes, too, there gleamed a dangerous light; but, before the detective could stay her, the pistol was turned, there rang out a sharp report, and from her side there welled the bright blood, splashing the wooden floor, and with a moaning cry she tottered and fell, Price half catching her in his shackled arms as she sank.

Only once she spoke:

"Better this than a prison, Dick! And to die with you, love."

Then came a fluttering sigh, and she was gone.

An hour later, Densmore stood before the United States Commissioner, at Wildwood, and delivered his prisoner. Two hours later, a posse of officers secured the others, who were dragged half dead from their cellar furnace-room; and the next day, the detective alone stood by the open grave of poor Nettie, "the bravest and prettiest criminal he had ever known," he said, and heard the dull sound of the clods as they fell upon her coffin. Then he turned eastward again, his duty done.

The coiners of Kansas were no more.

A neighbor with a coffee cup in her hand called in on Uncle Mose, remarking: "Uncle Mose, I wants to borry a cup ob parched coffee from you for breakfast till to-morrow." "Go right to de box on de shef and hep yosef." The neighbor did as requested, but discovered it to be as empty as the head of a legislator. "Uncle Mose, dar's no parched coffee in dis heah box." "Does yer know why dar ain't no parched coffee in dat ar box?" "No; I doesn't know nuffin' about it." "Dar am no coffee in dat ar box," said the old man solemnly, "bekase dat am de returned coffee box. Ef yer had brung back all de coffee yer borrowed last year hit would be plum full."—Galveston News.

An English minister was once catechising his young parishioners before the congregation, when he put the usual question to a stout girl, whose father kept a public house: "What is your name?" No reply. The question being repeated the girl replied: "Nane of your fun, Mr. ——, ye ken my name weel enough. Do ye no' say, when ye come to our house on a night, 'Bet, bring me some ale!'" The congregation, forgetting the sacredness of the place and the surrounding circumstances, assumed a broad grin, and the parson looked rather foolish.

The brewery of Bass, at Burton, England, with outbuildings, occupies an area about the size of Boston Common. It requires the product of 70,000 acres of land to furnish sufficient barley to run the works for one year. The value of the product is about $12,000,000 per annum.

A Strike.

Once upon an evening dreary,
As I pondered sad and weary,
O'er the basket with the mending from the wash
the day before;
As I thought of countless stitches
To be placed in little breeches,
Rose my heart rebellious in me, as it oft had done before,
At the fate that did condemn me, when my daily task was o'er,
To that basket evermore.

John, with scarce a sigh or motion,
Sat and read the Inter-Ocean,
With no thought of the commotion,
Which within me rankled sore.
"He," thought I, "when day is ended,
Has no stockings to be mended,
Has no babies to be tended,
He can sit and read and snore;
He can sit and read and rest him;
Must I work thus evermore?"
And my heart rebellious answered,
"Nevermore; no, nevermore."
For, though I am but a woman,
Every nerve within is human,— Aching, throbbing, when o'erworked—
Mind and body sick and sore.
"I will strike when day is ended,
Though the stockings are not mended,
Though my course can't be defended;
Safe behind the closet door,
Goes that basket with the mending, and I'll haunted be no more.
In the daylight shall be crowded all the work that I will do;
When the evening lamps are lighted I will read the papers, too."

Here Pegasus stumbled, but the strike has been a success. Try it, sisters.

THE TWO ROADS.

It was New Year's night. An aged man was standing at the window. He raised his eyes towards the deep, blue sky, where the stars were floating like white lilies on the surface of a clear, calm lake. Then he cast them on the earth, where a few more helpless beings than himself were moving towards their inevitable goal—the tomb. Already he had passed sixty of the stages that lead to it, and he had brought from his journey nothing but errors and remorse. His health was destroyed, his mind unfinished, his heart sorrowful, and his old age devoid of comfort.

The days of his youth rose up in a vision before him, and he reached the solemn moment when his father placed him at the entrance of two roads, one leading into a peaceful, sunny land, covered with fertile harvest, and resounding with soft, sweet songs: while the other conducted the wanderer into a deep, dark cave, whence there was no issue, where poison flowed instead of water, and where serpents hissed and crawled.

He looked towards the sky, and then cried out, in his anguish: "Oh, youth, return! Oh, my father, place me once more at the cross-way of life, that I may choose the better road!" But the days of his youth had passed away, and his parents were with the departed. He saw wandering lights float over dark marshes, and then disappear. "Such," he said, "were the days of my wasted life!" He saw a star shoot from Heaven, and vanish in darkness athwart the church-yard. "Behold an emblem of myself!" he exclaimed; and the sharp arrows of unavailing remorse struck him to the heart.

Then he remembered his early companions, who had entered life with him, but who having trod the paths of virtue and industry, were now happy and honored on this New Year's night. The clock in the high church tower struck, and the sound, falling on his ear, called many tokens of the love of his parents for him, their erring son; the lessons they had taught him; the prayers they had offered up in his behalf. Overwhelmed with shame and grief, he dared no longer look towards that Heaven where they dwelt. His darkened eyes dropped tears, and with one despairing effort, he cried aloud, "Come back, my early days! Come back!"

And his youth did return; for all this had been a dream, visiting his slumbers on New Year's night. He was still young; his errors only were no dream. He thanked God fervently that the time was still his own; that he had not yet entered the deep, dark cavern, but that he was free to tread the road leading to the peaceful land where sunny harvests wave.

Ye who linger on the threshold of life, doubting which path to choose, remember that when years shall have passed, and your feet shall stumble on the dark mountain, you will cry bitterly, but cry in vain, "Oh, youth, return! Oh, give me back my early days."—Jean Paul Richter.

ETIQUETTE OF CONVERSATION.

Do not manifest impatience.

Do not engage in arguments.

Do no interrupt another when speaking.

Do not find fault, though you may gently criticise.

Do not talk of your private, personal and family matters.

Do not appear to notice inaccuracies of speech in others.

Do not allow yourself to lose temper or speak excitedly.

Do not always commence a conversation by allusion to the weather.

Do not, when narrating an incident, continually say, "you see," "you know," etc.

Do not introduce professional or other topics, that the company generally cannot take an interest in.

Do not talk very loud. A firm, clear, distinct, yet mild, gentle and musical voice has great power.

Do not be absent-minded, requiring the speaker to repeat what has been said that you may understand.

Do not speak disrespectfully of personal appearances when any one present may have the same defects.

Do not try to force yourself into the confidence of others. If they give their confidence, never betray it.

Do not use profanity, vulgar terms, slang phrases, words of double meaning, or language that will bring a blush to any one.

Do not intersperse your conversation with foreign words and high-sounding terms. It shows affectation, and will draw ridicule upon you.

Do not carry on a conversation with another in company about matters which the general company knows nothing of. It is almost as impolite as to whisper.

A man found a rough-looking individual in his cellar. "Who are you?" he demanded. "The gas man, come to take the meter," was the reply. "Great heaven! I hoped you were only a burglar!" cried the householder.

A BAR FOR WOMEN.

The latest project for the refreshment of fashionable women is a bar. Now, bar-rooms in which disreputable women drink are no novelty; but this is no such concern. It is as respectable as it is unique. It is in Broadway, close to Stewart's great mart and Wallack's theater, in the midst of handsome retail establishments. The front is resplendent with plate-glass, and the store itself is wide, deep and elegantly fitted up. The walls and ceiling are frescoed, and the floor is marble. One side is devoted to the sale of confectionery. That shows the proprietor's shrewdness, for women probably would not go in if there was nothing but a bar in the place. The bar runs along the opposite side, and is about the same in style as those of the best cafes, though the marble counter is a little lower. An immense mirror faces the drinkers, and the back-bar is adorned with cut-glasses, and decanters. Instead of a beer pump, however, there is a soda fountain. Piles of lemons, an ornamental lemon-squeezer, groups of ginger ale bottles, and pyramids of silver Tom and Jerry cups, make a display as gorgeous as can be found on any bar in the city. Two bar-tenders, of the regulation pattern, with their hair and mustaches carefully brushed, diamonds glistening on their polished shirt-fronts, and the sleeves of their white coats turned up to the elbows, are constantly on duty. The women walk up just like little men, and order their drinks with the careless air of veterans. The enterprise has been under way only a few weeks, and is already an established success. The beverages are about what might be expected. "Hard liquors" are not sold, except in mixed drinks, as in Tom and Jerries, on which the run during the present cold weather is brisk. They are made hot and sweet, and the women dote on them. The next most popular drink just now is hot punch, composed of rum, lemon-juice, water and a dash of brandy. Sometimes seltzer is ordered in place of the water. Hot coffee, chocolate and lemonade are also sold in large quantities. On days of moderate temperature the call is for cold lemonade, claret punch, ginger ale and soda water. While I was there yesterday the pop of the ale-bottle was momentary and the lever of the lemon-squeezer was in almost constant motion. Women stand three feet deep in front of the bar. Two companions drank together, and each paid for her own dissipation; but as a rule the gentle tipplers gracefully imitated polite bar-room manners, though they were given to sipping their beverages slowly, instead of tossing them into their mouths like so much medicine. "What are you going to drink?" said a mild-faced sapling of a girl in a cloak of satin matelasse and a blue capote. "It's my treat this time," replied a cherry-lipped dumpling of a belle in maroon velvet. "No, no; you bought yesterday. Come, what'll you take?" "A seltzer lemonade." "Make me a Tom and Jerry, sweet." So the confusion of orders and the eager drinking went on. I asked one of the bar-tenders why he didn't keep lager beer on tap, since New York women drink it at home and in the concert-gardens so generally. He said: "O, we want to go slow at first,—don't want to startle our customers too much; but we'll give 'em beer as soon as warm weather comes."—New York Letter.

SUGGESTIONS CONCERNING LONG LIFE.

If any one could furnish the world with a medicine which would insure a long life, there is no end to the demand he would have for his drug. The Herald of Health thinks he would need many factories to make it, and many banks to hold the money he would receive. Fortunately there is no such medicine, and so the world will have to get along in some other way.

Some time ago the French Government sent a circular letter to all the districts of that country to collect information as to those conditions of life which seemed to favor longevity. The replies were very interesting, but on the whole rather monotonous; and the general result was that longevity is promoted by great sobriety, regular labor, especially in the open air, short of excessive fatigue, easy hours, a well-off condition, a philosophical mind in meeting troubles, not too much intellect, and a domestic life. The value of marriage was universally admitted, and long-lived parents were also found an important factor. A healthy climate and good water were mentioned. All this agrees with common sense, unless the idea that the intellect is a hinderance to longevity be considered unreasonable, and we know that some of the most intellectual men have lived to great age.—Scieneific American.

It is useless for us to be praying to God and all the while handing our souls over to the devil. When temptation comes, there is only one way to meet it, and that is not to meet it, but to run from it with a face of horror. People sometimes cry, "Good Lord, deliver us," praying, praying, and yet all the while lingering in the presence of sin, dallying and toying with it. Legs are good for two things; one is that we may kneel and pray, the other that we may run. Knee-religion is good, but we want a foot-religion also, and we must get away from the devil as fast as we can.

A SOCIABLE TIME OF IT.—A couple of colored ladies met on the corner of Galveston Avenue.

An experienced matron says: "A man will eat soggy biscuit twice a week without a complaint when his girl invites him out to tea, but when the girl becomes his wife, if there is the faintest indication of a touch of saleratus in them, the neighbors will think the district school is out for a recess by the racket he makes."

The life of a submarine telegraph cable is shown by experience to be from ten to twelve years. If a cable breaks in deep water after it is ten years of age, it cannot be lifted for repairs, as it will break of its own weight—a fatal difficulty, and for which there seems to be no practical remedy.

According to the Kennebec Journal a good joke on a young fellow who bought a farm last Winter, has just leaked out. He had a fine orchard of about two hundred apple trees, and a few weeks ago he tapped every one of them for cider.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 12, 1881.

Gov. Long has nominated District Attorney H. B. Staples of Worcester for judge of the superior court, vice Dewey, resigned.

The Senatorial contest in Pennsylvania is still unsettled, but it takes a new turn by the withdrawal on Wednesday of both Oliver and Grow, and it is hoped the Republicans will now unite on some good man and elect him.

The Democrats in the United States Senate propose to utilize David Davis's ambition to be chairman of the judiciary committee, it is said, by promising him the position, on condition that he vote with them in the organization of the new Senate.

Springfield, West Springfield and Holyoke are a good deal disturbed over a proposition to raise the dam in the Connecticut river at Enfield, Ct., three or four feet, and have sent down large delegations to the committee hearings at Hartford this week, to protest against any change which shall set back the water any more.

Congress counted the electoral votes Wednesday quietly and without excitement, Garfield and Arthur being declared elected. The question of counting the vote of Georgia was weakly passed over without decision. It made no difference with the result, of course, and for that very reason this was the time to decide without undue partisan feeling whether votes not cast according to law have any right to be counted.

The House at Washington had a spasm of virtue on Monday, defeating by a close vote the river and harbor bill, which appropriates over $10,000,000, and it is very doubtful whether it can pass this session. The bill covers a multitude of jobs which ought to be defeated, but which are generally put through with a rush. A second attempt was made to pass it on Wednesday, but Representative Robinson attacked it so sharply that it went over.

Representative Robinson made an excellent speech on the reapportionment question in the House at Washington the other day, holding that the number of members should be increased as little as possible, and that the reapportionment should be made without regard to section or party, in accordance with the population of the States and not their voters. He paid a high compliment to the Massachusetts election laws, and improved the opportunity to clearly set forth the falsity of Butler's wild statements regarding the disfranchisement of voters.

It is understood that Dr. Loring expects to be appointed commissioner of agriculture by President Garfield, and he has fondly hoped Congress would elevate the bureau into an executive department, making him a member of the cabinet, as secretary of agriculture. A bill was before the House on Monday for this purpose, but after a number of speeches urging the importance of thus recognizing the farming interests of the country, the bill was defeated, the House not being quite ready to begin the formation of departments to represent the various business interests of the country.

It seems that, according to Jay Gould, the recent consolidation of the telegraph companies was not made for the benefit of the stockholders' pockets, but for the philanthropic purpose of developing an efficient system of cheap telegraphy on a big scale, covering both sea and land. He would make the use of the telegraph much more common than at present, putting wires and operators into private business houses, newspaper offices, etc., when needed, and extending the wires over the world generally. This is a very commendable and comprehensive purpose, and when steps are taken toward its fulfillment the objections to the consolidation will without doubt disappear.

"Red" Leary, the noted burglar who is believed to have headed the gang that robbed the Northampton National Bank of over $1,000,000 in securities four years ago, was arrested in Brooklyn, N. Y., last week Friday morning, by Detective Pinkerton, and is now safely housed in Northampton jail. Leary escaped from Ludlow street jail in New York last May, and his whereabouts have been hard to discover, as he is a very slippery fellow. Billy Connors, another of the robbers, was arrested the same day at Philadelphia and taken to Northampton. Every member of the gang is now behind the bars but one, who is dead. The bank officers say there will be no compromise, and it is therefore hoped that Leary and Connors will be put to work for the State for a long term of years.

A man in New York has been coining money by establishing the "American College of Heraldry," for the purpose of tracing genealogies, furnishing family coats-of-arms, etc. The "college" consisted of himself and a secretary, and his principal business seems to have been the securing of life members, who paid $50 for the privilege, and he has brought in nearly every prominent man in the city, on the strength of his statement that other prominent men were members. He is believed to have accumulated some $25,000 in this way.

W. H. Vanderbilt last Saturday paid the entire cost of transporting the Egyptian obelisk from Alexandria to New York and setting it up in Central Park, also adding $30,000 for bringing over the pedestal, which was not included in his original offer, as it was not then known to exist.

Thomas Carlyle, the great moralist, and one of the first literary men of the age, died last Saturday at his home in Chelsea, near London, at the age of 85.

AT THE STATE HOUSE.

The House has rejected the proposed amendments to the constitution providing for biennial elections. The bill was first rejected in a thin House last week Friday by a tie vote of 86 to 86, and this vote was reconsidered on Monday and the subject placed in the orders of the day for Thursday, when after considerable debate the first amendment was defeated by a vote of 111 ayes to 86 nays, not the necessary two-thirds, and the second one by a vote of 82 to 97. The House thus deliberately refuses to give the people an opportunity to express their views on the question, the majority plainly fearing that the verdict would be against them. The opponents of the measure have been active and aggressive, while its friends have remained passive, letting it be defeated almost without protest. But the people's opportunity will come sometime, even though it be long delayed.

According to the United States census the total public debt of Massachusetts, including State, cities, towns and counties, is $109,933,948. Of this sum nearly thirty millions are for water works, which is an investment that pays its own interest. The expense of the war entailed a debt yet unpaid of nearly thirteen millions, and the State has about eighteen millions of debt caused by the Hoosac Tunnel.

Report from all but four towns in this State show that in 224 cities and towns no liquor licenses are granted, and in 116 cities and towns 5397 licenses are in force. The "January thaw" has got along at last. It is a little late, to be sure, but it is just as hearty a thaw as it would have been had it come when Vennor said it would. It began on Wednesday, kept it up on Thursday with the assistance of a steady rain, and continued at it to a less extent yesterday with the aid of a warm sun. The snow disappeared rapidly on Thursday, but there is still enough left so that the sleighing is not seriously affected.

Judge Colt of the supreme court on Monday heard at Springfield the case of Judge Robinson of this place against Ellen M. Cadwell of New York and her husband. Mr. Cadwell bid off a piece of property in Springfield which Judge Robinson had mortgaged to Cadwell's wife, and which was subsequently sold under foreclosure, but Robinson supposed he had bid it off himself. The records proved differently, and the case was dismissed.

Main street pedestrians have found an imposing pond barring their way on the walk in front of Lawyer Strong's office, on two or three days this week, which the thickest planks would scarcely bridge, and a detour into the street has been necessary. There is a sewer opening at that point, but it was covered with snow and ice, and nobody took the trouble to open it. The thaw has now done, however, what somebody else ought to have done, and the water is carried off.

The number of books circulated by the public library during the year ending Feb. 7 was over 15,500. This number is not as large as during the year previous, but the difference is accounted for by the fact that a great many children went through the "Oliver Optic" class of juveniles the first year the library was open, and having exhausted them, do not longer patronize the library. The books drawn the past year have been of a higher order than those drawn the year before.

A change was made in the time table of the New London Northern Railroad Thursday, by which Conductor Hastings's train leaves this place for Amherst at 10.45 a. m., on the arrival of trains from the south and east, instead of at 1.45 p. m. as heretofore. Returning the train leaves Amherst at 12.20 p. m., arriving at Palmer in season to connect with the express for New York, as well as trains east and south. The Amherst people will doubtless appreciate the change, as they have never been satisfied with the old arrangement of trains.

It is proposed to have a meeting at the Congregational church in Thorndike next Monday evening, in which the clergymen and members of the different churches throughout the town will unite, in the hope of awakening an increased interest in religious matters in that place. Some few, too, will doubtless take especial delight in fowarding to their acquaintances specimens of those horrible caricatures which adorn the store windows, and which suggest anything but tender emotions.

If any of our readers are trembling lest the world shall come to an end this year, in fulfillment of Mother Shipton's familiar prophecy, it may reassure them somewhat to know that the so-called prophecy is a hoax. The woman actually lived, and was wont to utter imaginings which some people considered prophecies. Though they were of little account a number of them were published in a book nearly three centuries ago, which book is in the British Museum. In 1862 a printer named Charles Hindley pretended to republish this book, and interpolated ten prophecies of his own composition, among which is the famous one in regard to the end of the world in 1881. When the lines were composed most of the events alluded to therein had already become matters of history. Hindley confessed his imposition in 1873.

In the death of Mrs. Elisha Kinney, which occurred last Saturday, the town loses an active, stirring, and motherly woman, whose management of the old hotel has made her well and favorably known, far and wide. For many years "Ma'am Kinney's" has been a favorite resort for hunting, fishing and sleigh-ride parties, and all who went there once were sure to go again, for she was a most skillful cook, and her table was always loaded with an astonishing variety of appetizing and excellent food, while she was tireless in her endeavors to make her guests happy and at home.

The twenty-fifth anniversary of the settlement of Rev. A. E. P. Perkins, D. D., as pastor of the East Congregational church, occurred Dec. 5, 1880, and it being unusual for a pastor to remain so long in one place, it was thought best to have some sort of a celebration of the event. WINTER'S WOFUL WORK.

Terrible suffering is reported among the poor negro exodists in Kansas, in consequence of the extreme cold and their poverty. Thousands of them are utterly destitute, hundreds are frost bitten, bleeding and starving, and many have died. Dr. Newlon, of Oswego, Kan., wrote on the 30th ult: "To the widows and destitute we have been giving bacon and corn in the ear. It is all we can do, and that must give out in three days from now. I wrote that four perished in the last storm; I mean it, as a physician and honest man will swear to it. One, a poor consumptive, in a cold house, with the cold winds driving in, Katy Richardson—remember that name, mothers. Her colored pastor, Mr. Green, asked her, "How is it, Katy, with you and the Lord?" She opened her eyes, with joy on her countenance, and said, "I am just waiting for the everlasting gates to open and let me in." And the spirit of the poor, humble creature took its flight with the wind that froze her body. Ella Shepherd, a poor woman, (her husband in Texas) was confined in a poor, open house in the Neosho timber. She had nothing to eat. The bed was dirty and thin, and she was frost bitten in it and the babe died. We have no help for these poor people at home, and no one seems to care for them. I go to bed at night, and their black faces come to me in my sleep, calling for aid. All we can do is to give them the clothes and bedding sent us, and attend to their sick. We need 200 or 300 pairs of shoes, and food." Similar reports come from other parts of the State, and while charitable people in the State have done much to relieve the sufferers, much more ample relief must be speedily given, or hundreds will perish.

A Lake Shore train and a switch engine were standing in the depot, but none of their occupants were injured. The old depot was 450 feet long and 100 wide, and is a mass of ruins.

Three men and two boys were drowned at Fall River last Sunday, by breaking through the ice.

An express train on the Cheshire Railroad ran into a freight train near Fitzwilliam, N. H., last Saturday night, injuring two men, while the engineer jumped off and broke his neck.

A woman was found burned to death at Burlington, Ia., last Saturday, and is believed to have set her own clothing on fire, in a fit of despondency.

George Corcoran, a Boston & Albany freight brakeman, was instantly killed by falling from a train near Washington last Saturday morning.

A man went into the tar well of the gas works at Stonington, R. I., last Sunday, with a lighted lantern, when an explosion resulted, and he was killed.

An engineer on the New York & New England road was badly scalded, and the fireman knocked from the cab on Tuesday by a broken connecting rod, which partially wrecked the boiler.

An express train on the Michigan Southern road was thrown from the track near Striker, Ind., Monday, by a broken rail, and a car containing a number of railroad officials was wrecked and its occupants badly bruised.

An entire family were found frozen to death in their shanty at Burns, Minn., last week, and it is feared that many others in that region will starve or be frozen to death before help can reach them.

Walter Blackwell of West Sandwich accidentally shot himself while hunting last week Friday. When his body was found his faithful dog was beside it, and had to be killed, as he would allow no one to approach.

Three laborers were killed and several others injured Tuesday evening by a collision between a passenger and a construction train on the Ohio and Mississippi Railroad.

There was another crash at Buffalo Wednesday, though fortunately unattended by loss of human life. The floor of a building overloaded with grain fell, and carried all before it into the cellar.

A passenger train ran into a freight train at Rock Hill, Pa., Thursday, killing two persons and fatally injuring four more.

A careless miner caused a terrific explosion in a coal mine near Salem, O., on Thursday, which killed six men and injured several others severely.

Two cars of a passenger train jumped the track at Communipaw, N. J., Thursday evening, and one of them upset and caught fire, several passengers being injured.

FIRES.—The town of Monroeville, Ind., was nearly swept out of existence by fire on Monday, and Walnut, Iowa, had a similar experience on Sunday. Loss about $150,000. ——Indianapolis had a $500,000 fire Monday night in a large pork house.——Half the business part of Omri, Wis., was burned Monday morning, causing a loss of $200,000. ——About $400,000 worth of property was destroyed at St. Louis by a fire last Saturday.——One of the Springfield Blanket Company's mills at Holyoke was damaged $20,000 worth by fire last Saturday night. The City flour mills at the same place were burned out Tuesday morning, at a loss of about $15,000.

The Charleston, S. C., News and Courier frankly confesses that frauds were practiced in the last elections at the South, but says they were necessary to secure honest government, and are "no more regarded as a crime than shooting a burglar." It is said that the negroes are still led by the same set of carpet-baggers as of old, and that they cannot live in peace and security under any such government as these carpet-baggers give them. If these statements are true, they had better try the influence of the school master in improving matters, both with whites and blacks.

The latest estimate of expense involved in the arrears of pensions act passed in 1879 is $510,000,000. When the bill was passed the amount involved was estimated at from $30,000,000 to $70,000,000. It was passed as a bid for the soldiers' vote, and neither party dared to oppose it. Before it was passed the annual pension roll amounted to about $30,000,000 a year. It is now over $50,000,000, and it will increase to $60,000,000 when the claims are all in. It is believed that one claim in ten is fraudulent and would be thrown out by careful scrutiny of the lists.

Peter Cooper has written a letter to Mr. Gladstone, telling him that this country sacrificed 1,000,000 lives and $8,000,000 in treasure rather than accept the proposition made 20 years ago to buy the freedom of the slaves at a cost of $4,000,000,000, and asks him if the policy of coercion in Ireland will not cost Great Britain more than it would to buy the Irish lands and sell them to the tenants at fair rates.

The steamship Roraima, which went ashore at Shark river last week, has been floated.

Literary Notes.

Harper's Magazine for March is a delightful number. There is not a dull article in it; and the illustrations are full of interest and meaning. A striking feature of the number is its variety. Opening the magazine we are at first attracted by Mr. Conway's description of Bedford Park (in Chiswick, London)—a group of artistic buildings, in the Queen Anne style, picturesque without, and the interiors planned and decorated by the best artists. The article is illustrated from drawings by Mr. Nash, a London artist. Prof. W. T. Hewett contributes an interesting paper on the University of Leiden, with illustrations. J. L. Cloud gives another of her inimitable Irish sketches, "The Arran Islands," with quaint pictures. S. B. Parsons, in "The Possibilities of Horticulture," shows how to make gardens and lawns beautiful; the illustrations to his article representing the best recent work in this direction. An anonymous article—evidently written by a Knickerbocker—describes Albany as an old Dutch town two centuries ago. This paper contains sixteen illustrations. Closing the list of descriptive illustrated articles is Mr. Lathrop's "A Nation in a Nutshell"—a brilliant description of social and political Washington, with twelve illustrations. Abbey contributes another Herrick illustration, "The Grave-digger," a very impressive drawing. Harper's is very fortunate in both of its serial novels. Miss Woolson's "Anne" has fairly won all readers; and Mr. Hardy, who, since the death of George Eliot, is ranked by the London Academy as the first of living novelists, has done no better work than he is giving us in his "A Laodicean." This number also contains two excellent short stories—"Hands Off," which is an interesting parable, and "A Help-meet for Him." George Merrill contributes an instructive article on "The French Republic," and Henry O. Dwight an entertaining paper on "The Family life of the Turks." The editoral departments are full, instructive and entertaining, as usual.

Second-crop ice, 18 inches thick and free from snow, is being cut from the Connecticut river opposite Hartford. Third-crop ice is 9 inches thick, and the great mass of the ice covering the river has an average thickness of 30 inches. Six inch ice is shown which has formed in three days.

The immense success attending the grand bargain sale of overcoats and ulsters, announced some three weeks ago by the Opera House Clothing Co. of Springfield, induces them to extend the time 30 days, which is of no little interest to people in this vicinity. Many new lines of bargains from their manufactory in Boston have been added to their stock, and they promise greater inducements than ever. A word to the wise, &c.

TESTIMONIALS.

Westboro, Jan. 25, 1881.

Willard's Patent Truss seems to possess some principles of mechanism well calculated to reach a large number of cases of Hernia hitherto controlled by instruments in common use. Worcester, Dec. 24, 1880.

I have seen the working of Willard's Truss among my patients. I think it a superior instrument, and well calculated mechanically to answer its purpose. It embraces some new principles, and is worn with ease and confidence by all I know who use it. RUFUS WOODWARD.

Little Justin's Prayer.

Tired Justin, in his night-gown,
After playing all the day,
Kneels, with heavy, drooping eyelids,
By his mamma's side to pray.

"Come, begin, my pet—'Our Father' '—
"No, I ot 'at," breaks in the elf,
"'At too long, and me too sleepy,
Make a little pray'r myself.

"Dod bess all the folks and chillems,
Keep 'em safe till mornin' light,
Speshly me and my dear mamma,
Amen. Tiss me quick—dood night."

HOW TOOTH BRUSHES ARE MADE.

Although the tooth brush is not a very complicated article, no small degree of skill is required in its manufacture. In the first place care must be experienced in the selection of bone from which the handle is to be made. For this purpose the thigh bone of an ox is used, and instead of boiling these with the joints on—the method usually in vogue—these joints are sawed off previous to the boiling process. The increased heat necessary in the former method renders the bone unfit for the purpose of the brush manufacturer.

On arriving at the factory the bones are first sawed into the required length and thickness for brush handles. They are next turned with a model, in a similar manner to that employed in the manufacture of shoe lasts. Then comes the polishing process, which is done by means of a sort of revolving churn. An ingeniously contrived machine now takes the pieces and deftly punctures holes for the bristles, while grooves are cut in the top by saws. Now being ready for the bristles they are introduced to the department for this work. Girls are usually employed for this branch of the business. After putting in the bristles, they are backed with sealing wax to fasten them securely in place and to fill up the grooves. All that remains to be done is to brand the brushes and pack them for market.

We possess one advantage over the English in the manufacture of tooth brushes, inasmuch as we have more sun for bleaching the bone handles.—Com. Bulletin.

NEURALGIA AS A WARNING.

The great prevalence of "neuralgia"—or what commonly goes by that name—should be regarded as a warning indicative of a low condition of health, which must necessarily render those who are affected with this painful malady especially susceptible to the invasion of diseases of an aggressive type. This is the season at which it is particularly desirable to be strong and well furnished with the sort of strength that affords a natural protection against disease. There will presently be need of all the internal heat which the organism can command, and a good store of fat for use as fuel is not to be despised. It is no less essential that the vital forces should be vigorous, and the nerve power, especially, in full development. Nearalgia indicates a low or depressed state of vitality, and nothing so rapidly exhausts the system as pain that prevents sleep and agonizes both body and mind. It is, therefore, of the first moment that attacks of this affection, incidental to and indicative of a poor and weak state, should be promptly placed under treatment, and as rapidly as may be controlled. It is worth while to note this fact, because, while the spirit of manliness incites the "strong-minded" to patient endurance of suffering, it is not wise to suffer the distress caused by this malady, as many are now suffering it, without seeking relief, forgetful of the condition that it bespeaks, and the constitutional danger of which it is a warning sign.—Lancet.

SOUND ADVICE.—We advise all young people to acquire early in life the habit of using good language, both in speaking and writing, and also to abandon the use of slang words and phrases. The longer they live the more difficult the acquisition of good language becomes. If many of one's early years be passed in abuse, the unfortunate victim of neglected education is very probably doomed to talk slang for life. Money is not necessary to secure this education. Every man has it in his power. He has to use the language which he reads, instead of the language which he hears, to form tastes from the best speakers and poets of the country; to treasure up choice phrases in his memory, and habituate himself to their use, avoiding at the same time the pedantic precision and bombast which show rather the weakness of vain ambition than the polish of an educated mind.

A professor asked his class, "What is the aurora?" A student hesitating, replied: "I did know, professor, but I have forgotten. The professor said, "That is sad, very sad. The only man in the world that ever knew has forgotten it!"

Profanity never did any man the least good. No man is richer, or happier, or wiser for it. It commends noe on to society, it is disgusting to the refined and abominable to the good.

His text was, "What doest thou here, Elijah?" He divided it into two heads. "First, my brethren, let us consider what Elijah did hear, and secondly, what he did not hear."

A clever toy of this season's invention in London is a musical top. It is spun in the ordinary way, and while spinning plays musical airs accurately and melodiously.

The world is like a skating park, nice when you can slide smoothly over its surface, but cruel and cold to sit down on when you get your feet knocked from under you.

I hav finally got so that I ain't at all sertain ov what I kno miself, and am gittin less sertain ov what others say they kno.—Josh Billings.

Any man, whatever his worldly title or honors, ought to be proud to worthily bear the name of Christian.

The invalid's hope and strength beyond all other remedies is Malt Bitters.

CHASING A TRAIN.

The Rev. J. Hyatt is rather humorous as well as pious, judging from his relation of the following good joke on himself:

"We stopped in Syracuse, N. Y., for dinner. You remember the railroad depot, centrally located, with its eastern and western entrances exactly alike—as much so as the two ends of a car. After we had dined, the depot-master informed us that we had seventeen minutes to spare before the departure of the Eastern train. This, I thought, will give me an opportunity of seeing the city, and a glorious chance for 'a smoke,' provided a clergyman could be tempted into such a piece of wasteful and worldly amusement. I sauntered forth, and after an absence of exactly thirteen minutes, having enjoyed a delightful and soothing stroll, I was leisurely returning, watch in hand, when, to my sudden astonishment, I beheld the train slowly gliding out at the other end of the depot, and increasing its speed at every puff of the gigantic locomotive. Here indeed was a 'call' that admitted of neither correspondence nor delay; there was no time for 'taking into consideration,' so without conferring with flesh and blood, I put off like a sky-rocket with a double fuse. For a moment I thought I had it all my own way; I thought I was gaining ground, although I knew I was losing wind. I was encouraged in the race by sundry helpful fellows who kept crying out as I passed, 'Go it gaiters! 'Plucky boy!' 'He ain't left, O, no,' and other well-meaning and benignant exhortations.

"Though indeed, perhaps, helping me over the course, I found the more they shouted the less inclined I was to run, and the more decidedly did the locomotive make terrible headway against me. To give up the chase, to submit to the chagrin of being left, to lose my party and passage, to meet with disappointment and not to meet with friends—all this was bad enough; but the thought of encountering, all the way back to the depot, that line of interesting individuals who, with their cheerful exclamations, had so feelingly encouraged me on my outward journey, this was the bitterest pill of this unexpected dose. But it must be done; so tapering off gradually, I gave up the contest, and turned back to meet my fate, and—if I could find him—the depot-master, whose blundering statements were the cause of all my trouble. Without search that individual advanced to meet me with the bland recognition of a fact that no one could well deny—'Well, you got left, did you?' I replied only with the resentment of a 'silencing eye.' If I looked as I tried to look, my photograph taken at that instant would hardly be chosen to grace an album gallery of 'eminent divines.' Several bystanders, seeking information, asked with a show of confidential interest in my case, in what wise the thing happened, and others, wishing 'to point a moral,' advised me to be on hand a little earlier next time.

"With returning breath, relief and words came together, and I squarely charged the railroad official with all the blame. I spoke of his incompetency in no measured terms, recalling how after I had placed my party in the car, he had assured me that there was full seventeen minutes to spare befor the train went out; while there, said I, with a triumphant exhibition of my watch, the seventeen minutes are now barely up, and yet the train has gone out of sight.

"After no little hot shot cast back and forth with the usual variations and final perorations of 'you did and you didn't,' 'you're another,' etc., I asked him if I would be risking another chance of being left if I depended upon him to give me the exact hour of the departure of the next Eastern train. 'Eastern!' exclaimed he. 'Yes, Eastern,' replied I, with a decided upward and sarcastic inflection. 'Why,' quoth he, 'the train you've just been chasing with such poor luck, wasn't the Eastern train, but the Western express!' With much increasing confusion and excitement I stammered out, 'Then where in Joppa is the Eastern train?' 'Why, there it is,' replied he, 'just getting under way at the other end of the depot; leg it, or you'll lose that.'

"If ever I did make fast time, I made it then. I passed right through the depot like wind. I felt as if I was all legs. One glance, however, at the rear door of the last car as I was nearing it, came near being too much for me. I discovered the group of my long lost friends, whose forms and faces seemed bursting with poorly-suppressed and ill-timed mirth.

"As I reached safely the platform, the fire that opened upon me could only be equaled for its merciless effect by the fire in the rear from which I had providentially fled. I heard jibes and jokes and jeers; I heard the hoarse laugh of full-chested men, the hysterical efforts of mirth-exhausted women. They had all witnessed my chase after the wrong train; now fearful lest indeed I should overtake it, and then rejoiced at my evident lack of what jockeys call 'bottom,' as my speed began to slacken and my chances with the locomotive began to grow 'smaller by degrees and beautifully less.' They had witnessed the 'blowing up' administered to the depot master, the strange procrastination in starting for the right train, until at length it had actually started and I had entered upon a second 'stern chase.' Then they feared I was left again, as they looked with breathless interest at the unequal contest of legs versus a locomotive. They had witnessed my final triumph, but how gracefully was I welcomed, and with what feelings I received their peculiar congratulations, I leave my readers to imagine."

BOGUS CERTIFICATES.—It is no vile drugged stuff, pretending to be made of wonderful foreign roots, barks, &c., and puffed up by long bogus certificates of pretended miraculous cures, but a simple, pure, effective medicine, made of well-known valuable remedies, that furnishes its own certificates by its cures. We refer to Hop Bitters, the purest and best of medicines. See "Truths" and "Proverbs," in another column.

In Snow-Time.

How should I choose to walk the world with thee,
Mine own beloved? When green grass is stirred
By summer breezes, and each leafy tree,
Shelters the nest of many a singing bird?
In time of roses, when the earth doth lie
Dressed in a garment of midsummer hues,
Beneath a canopy of sapphire sky,
Lulled by a soft wind song? Or should I choose
To walk with thee along a wintry road,
Through flowerless fields, thick-sown with frosty rime,
Beside an ice bound stream, whose waters flowed
In voiceless music all the summer time?
In winter dreariness, or summer glee,
How should I choose to walk the world with thee?

The time of roses is the time of love,
Ah, my dear heart! but winter fires are bright,
And in the lack of sunshine from above
We tend more carefully love's sacred light.
The path among the roses lieth soft
Sun-kissed and radiant under youthful feet;
But on a wintry day true hands more oft
Do meet and cling in pressure close and sweet.
There is more need of love's supporting arm
Along life's slippery pathway in its frost.
There is more need for love to wrap us warm,
Against life's cold, when summer flowers are lost.
Let others share thy life's glad summer glow,
But let me walk beside thee in its snow!

A PYRAMID OF CABBAGES.

"Why, where are you going, Isabel Eastman? Not into the farm-yard, surely?"

"Yes, Miss Lottie Mayell, I am going into the farm-yard, surely," replied Isabel, with a mischievous light in her big gray eyes, and a charming smile on her prettily curved lips, as she opened the gate leading to that place. "Nowhere else can we be confidential without the danger of being overheard. The farmer's family is in the orchard; Charley and a half-dozen of his playmates are playing in the flower garden; there's a young couple in the parlor at the piano, he making love, and she not making music, and a still younger couple giggling and whispering in the bay-window; auntie is in my room enjoying "Splendid Misery," and grandma is in auntie's room darning stockings. And so, if you really want to hear 'right away' why I am here instead of at one of my usual summer haunts, you must e'en follow me to the farm-yard. Besides which—" speaking with animation— "I have lately, strange as it may seem to you, developed quite a passion for farm-yards."

"It doesn't seem at all strange to me, my dear, for during our ten years' friendship you've always been developing some odd passion or other. But I've never lost faith in you. Lead on; I'll follow."

And stepping daintily and gracefully, unimpeded by trains or demi-trains, the young girls threaded their way through the crowd of hens and chickens holding a loud and lively consultation preparatory to going to roost; past the cows waiting to be milked, and turning their heads to look after the intruders with great solemn brown eyes; and old Lowhead, the white horse, slaking his thirst at the water-trough—to the extreme end of the farm-yard, where a pile of cabbages, neatly arranged in the form of a pyramid, confronted them.

"Behold," said Isabel, stopping before it, "how nature lends herself to art! (That sounds well, though I don't know as it means anything.) This mighty structure, formed of the green and succulent cabbage, is no doubt the work of some humble field-laborer, who, having read of the pyramids of Egypt—incited thereto, no doubt, by the newspaper paragraphs about our own dear obelisk—has sought to vary the monotony of cabbage life by building as close an imitation as his material would allow. Let us hope that this flight of imagination may lead to a higher one, and that the cabbage man, like the butter woman, may meet with public recognition, and at last be crowned with a wreath of laurel. Often from the humblest sources spring the noblest works of genius. Burns—Lottie—" breaking off suddenly and assuming a reproachful tone—"why do you break in upon my eloquence with loud and unseemly laughter? I was about to repeat to you Longfellow's last poem; now I won't. See what your frivolity has lost you! And take a seat upon the extreme base of the pyramid (I prefer the mound of sods in this secluded corner, sacred to somebody's rake and hoe) while I go back to the commonplace."

"Thank you, Bell, dear, I'll share the sods with you, if you please. I have an idea that a cabbage would prove a very uncomfortable seat under any circumstances. And do go back to the commonplace, that's a darling, for I'm dying to know what has happened since we parted an age ago."

"An age ago! One year and a half exactly. I was then engaged to Claude Venner. Pretty name, isn't it? And he was a pretty little fellow, with nice curly hair, and lovely blue eyes, with lashes long enough for a bang, small dimpled hands, and not an idea in his little round head. My mother—with all due deference I say it—and his mother—to whom I accord much less deference—made the match when I was eighteen, and I unmade it at twenty. I never loved Claude. How could I? And he never loved me. How could he? We were the victims of circumstances and match-making mammas, and two mortals more unlike it would be hard to find. He was the most conventional of men, and would have nearly died if at one of those dreary dinner parties in which his soul delighted, somebody had whispered to him that his back hair wasn't parted straight, while I have often been strongly tempted to shock the full-dressed guests, at the very start, by asking for more soup.

"Well, last June, at Newport, my diminutive friend Eda Smythe, with a head the exact counterpart of Claude's, appeared upon the scene, and she and my betrothed fell in love with each other at first sight. Mamma fretted and fumed and scolded, and asked me, with tragic emphasis, how I could look calmly on and see so many thousands of dollars being lost to the family, for she was sure that artful minx would persuade poor dear Claude to elope or something; but I continued to look calmly on, until one evening Claude, with a deep sigh, kissed Eda's hand as he bade her 'good-night,' when I turned suddenly upon them, and bade them follow me to my room. There I forgave—quite in the manner of a stage parent—the infatuated midgets their base duplicity, gave them my blessing, kissed them both, and as soon as they, beaming with joy, had departed, I, also beaming with joy, and not quite in the manner of a stage parent, except, perhaps, a "Pinafore" one, executed a pirouette—a mad, revolving pirouette—in honor of my newly acquired freedom. Mamma was awfully angry, but they're awfully happy, and they've named the baby after me. My chains (they were never very heavy, I must confess) broken beyond repair, I flirted more than ever, all the time growing weary as could be of hearing the same compliments and making the same replies, and doing this thing in the morning, that in the afternoon, and the other in the evening, and at last I fled from the old familiar throng precipitantly one rainy day, leaving my maid to pack my wardrobe and follow. And I determined that this summer I would try pastures entirely new. Auntie had often told me of the pleasant, old-fashioned farm-house which she discovered years ago, and I coaxed mamma,—promising to take Charlie, our youngest, who is the 'worrit' of her life, with me—to let me spend three of my four out-of-the-city months here. And, Lottie, I have never been as happy before, and I am firmly convinced that here I have found the kind of life that would suit me best. I was born to love cows and chickens, to make butter, to build pyramids of cabbages."

"You!" laughed her friend. "I think I see you in the dairy, in neat cambric dress, with sleeves rolled to the elbows, stamping the pats of butter with your monogram—for that's as near as you'd ever come to churning—and in the hennery, scattering corn to the chickens from a dainty white apron, a curiously shaped rustic hat meanwhile shading your rose-and-cream complexion from the sun. You born to love cows and chickens! —you who have reigned a city belle for four long years!"

"And for three been almost ready to abdicate. By-the-by,"—with assumed carelessness— "have you seen the young farmer, the only child of our host and hostess?"

"Certainly not;" and Miss Mayell glanced at her watch. "I only arrived two hours ago, and have seen no one but your aunt. But I can see him in 'my mind's eye'—tall, ungainly, and speaks through his nose; eats with his knife; says 'How?' and stares at you as though you were a being from another sphere."

"Your mind's eye needs an eyeglass, Miss Mayell. Its vision is weak. Tall, broad-shouldered, and gainly, if I may use the word as I mean it. I saw him tossing hay to-day, and he looked like an Apollo who had exchanged his lyre for a pitchfork, and profited by the change. And his table manners are quite as exquisite as your own, Miss Mayell; and he has a deep, full voice, and does not say 'How?' and has scarcely looked, let alone 'stared' at me. I have an idea that he regards girls of our ilk with a quiet scorn, and thinks of us, if he thinks of us at all, as hot-house flowers, not to be compared with the daisies growing wild in the meadows."

"How long have you been here, Isabel?"

"Six weeks."

"Quite long enough, I think. You'd better go away. You are regarding this young farmer, who never looks at you—I don't believe that, however—too sentimentally. You might come to believe that you had fallen in love with him."

"And if I did, what harm could result from that? He'll never come to believe he has fallen in love with me. He is so different from the soft-voiced, perfumed darlings by whom I have been surrounded all my life that, to use your own words with a different application, I stare at him as though he were a being from another sphere. The young farmer reads, Lottie, and reads books which, though printed in our native language, would be Greek to you and me; and he numbers the poets among his friends. I peeped into his room one day, and saw them all, in blue and gold, on his book-shelf. He is an honest, manly fellow, with no false pride about him. I was idiot enough to fancy that he might be the least bit confused when I first saw him at work in his red shirt, and coarse, very broad brimmed straw hat, but he saluted me as though he had been arrayed in the finest garments. And his name is Nathaniel—not as pretty as Claude, but it means 'the gift of God.' The gift of God, indeed, his old mother says he has been to her, and so will he be to the woman he marries. And that woman must be a bee, not a butterfly. Lottie"—with sudden fierceness—"if ever you tell, I'll kill you."

"My dear, when I do, you may. Isabel, I begin to suspect that you are already in love with Nathaniel—another of your odd passions—and that beneath your butterfly wings lurks the spirit of a bee. And I may live to see you help the pitchfork Apollo toss the hay, build obelisks and pyramids of cabbages, copy celebrated sculptures in beets, and heap turnips in imitation of classic old ruins."

"I fear me not, Miss Mayell. For though I would be proud to share in each and every one of those occupations, as soon would I expect that compact mass of greens to tremble to its base and then topple over, separating one huge body into a hundred or more heads, as dream that Nathaniel Leigh would ever care for me."

The pyramid trembled to its base, and its apex tumbled to the ground. The girls rose quickly from their throne of sods, and with little shrieks fled to a safe distance, then turned to look again. It toppled over, its many heads rolling in every direction, and in the place it had occupied stood the young farmer.

"I bless your brother for building a pyramid to-day, Miss Eastman," he said, "though he did unload one of the market wagons all ready for market for the purpose. And I bless the happy chance that kept me from the orchard, and sent me here to fall asleep behind it, to awaken at the sound of your voice. Spell-bound I remained concealed, half believing that I was still dreaming, to prove the falsity of the old proverb, 'Listeners never hear any good of themselves.' But can I—dare I hope that grains of earnest mingled with your jest, and that the pats of butter in our dairy may some day be stamped with our monogram? Stand my friend, Miss Mayell, and you shall not be forgotten when we make the beet statues and the turnip ruins."

"Well, 'pon my word!" exclaimed Miss Mayell, with a frank glance of admiration at the handsome young fellow, and a smile that threatened to become a laugh in another moment.

And "Of all things!" said Miss Eastman, a lovely blush mantling her face; and then youth and fun conquered all three, and they laughed until the farm-yard resounded, and Lion, the watch-dog, came bounding toward them, asking with loud bow-wows what was the matter.

A few weeks after Miss Isabel Eastman became Mrs. Nathaniel Leigh, her husband, lying at her feet in the orchard, and looking up into her face with adoring eyes said: "I never would have gained courage to have told you of my love, though I loved you from the very first, had I not heard from your own sweet lips that you cared a little for me. What good spirit, my blessed, sent you of all places to the farm-yard that afternoon?"

"It was an imp sent me there," she answered, demurely. "Mother's youngest, who whispered to me, as I left the house with Lottie, 'There's something awfully jolly 'way back in the farm-yard—a pyramid of cabbages—and Nat Leigh's fast asleep behind it!'"

DESCRIBING POINTS.

A habit of observing closely is important. It is not only exceedingly useful in many ways, but it adds immensely to the enjoyment of living. One may travel a mile or a hundred of them, or work a day or month in the field, and see little if anything of interest. Another, going over the same journey or work, will see points of interest at every step. The habit of careful, close observation should be developed and cultivated in childhood and youth. This can be helped by a sort of competing game, as good as any other, and more useful than most "plays." Let the players, two or more, select some person or thing, and each try to describe as many characteristics as possible, the one giving the greatest number to be the winner. If a person be chosen as the object, tell height, probable weight and age; form of body; color of eyes, and whether prominent or deep sunken; shape of nose, chin, mouth, lips, teeth, ears; color of hair, and whether coarse and stiff, or fine and soft, straight or curly; form of neck, large or small, short or long; and so on of other personal characteristics; the clothing, color, cut, appropriateness or otherwise; conduct, conversation, peculiarities, etc., etc. In the game score one mark for each item added to the description of any player. Take the same course with animals, trees, plants, houses, implements, etc., etc.

A teacher sends us a printed description, that would fill this column, of a swindler that had imposed upon him. Here are some of the items:...."About 42 years old; height about 5 feet 6 inches; smooth black hair; a tooth missing from the lower left jaw; lantern-jawed when speaking....Slovenly dressed; dark suit; blue-black velvet vest; black silk neckerchief, tied in a large double bow with flowing ends; carries eye-glasses, to be used or not;....easy in conversation; talks as if deeply versed in constitutional law, and in all political questions."....Many more "points" are stated, showing this teacher to be a close observer of human nature.

Criminals are almost daily found out because of the ability of some person to minutely observe and describe every one they happen to set their eyes upon. To some this is quite natural. It will readily become second nature if any one begins to cultivate the habit in youth. As above stated, the habit is of far wider usefulness than in merely detecting criminals. Let our young readers play "Describing Points," with all sorts of subjects for practice.—Am. Agriculturist for Feb.

MR. SMILEY REBELS.

The neighbors hadn't seen Mr. Smiley hobble around in the yard so lively for over a year. A hasty glance at the clothes line and he stumbled up the steps hurriedly and remarked excitedly:

"Hannah, that 'ere garment will have to come off the line at once. It's all over town that a rebel flag is flying in my yard."

"Well! law sakes! That's my last winter's balmoral sunning to clear out the moths."

"Sunning or no sunning, balmoral or whatever it is, it must come down."

"Ichabod, do you think I'm a fool, just because they're making game of you down to Smallbeer's grocery store? That balmoral stays there, rebel flag or no."

"Then I'll take it down myself," and he reached for the first clothes pin.

"See here, Ichabod. That flag, as you call it, rules this family. You rebel if you dare." And the neighbors who had gathered around the back yard fence were treated to the interesting tableau of a mop handle, wielded by Hannah Smiley's strong but freckled arm, crushing in the white plug hat that for years had been the emblem of Mr. Smiley's respectability.—New Haven Register.

SUDDEN CHECKING OF PERSPIRATION.

A Boston merchant, in "lending a hand" on board one of his ships on a windy day, found himself at the end of an hour an a half pretty well exhausted and perspiring freely. He sat down to rest, and engaging in conversation, time passed faster than he was aware of. In attempting to rise he found he was unable to do so without assistance. He was taken home and put to bed, where he remained two years; and for a long time afterwards could only hobble about with the aid of a crutch. Less exposures than this have in constitutions not so vigorous resulted in inflammation of the lungs—"pneumonia"—ending in death in less than a week, or causing tedious rheumatisms to be a source of torture during a lifetime. Multitudes of lives would be saved every year, and an incalculable amount of human suffering would be prevented, if parents would begin to explain to their children, at the age of three or four years, the danger which attends cooling off too quickly after exercise, and the importance of not standing still after exercise, or work, or play, or of remaining exposed to the wind, or of sitting at an open window or door, or of pulling off any garment, even the hat or bonnet, while in heat.

THE FUEL OF THE FUTURE.

An experimental exhibition of the production of a new fuel from the combination of petroleum and steam was given in New York recently. The invention promises results of importance. To produce combustion, nothing more is necessary than, by means of an atomizer, to unite dry steam and crude petroleum, only a common inch pipe being used for this purpose, one for steam, the other for oil, with cocks to regulate the flow. The junction is made within six inches of a perforated brick retort, which the nozzle enters, and instantly on a match being applied the whole interior of the furnace (an ordinary reverberatory smelting furnace) becomes intensely heated, so much so that all the exposed surfaces may be easily fused. If applied to a steam boiler, on a locomotive or on shipboard, it is only necessary to place the retorts, made of fire clay, on the grate bars, thus protecting the boiler plates from injury. It is claimed that a locomotive can be run from New York to Philadelphia for $4, instead of an expense of some $25, as at present with coal. More than this, the fuel creates no gas, smoke, ashes nor cinders.

That was a witty man who, being detained by a snow blockade, penned a dispatch which ran thus: "My dear sir, I have every motive for visiting you, except a locomotive." So was the other who, under similar circumstances, telegraphed to his firm in New York, "I shall not be in the office to-day, as I have not got home yesterday yet."

A New York boarding house took fire the other night, and the flames got as far as the pantry, when they went out for want of fuel.

Baked Beans.

Oh! how my heart sighs for my own native land,
Where potatoes, and squashes, and cucumbers grow;
Where cheer and good welcome are always at hand,
And custards and pumpkin pies smoke in a row;
Where pudding the visage of hunger serenes,
And what is far dearer, the pot of baked beans.

Let Maryland boast of her dainties profuse,
Her large watermelons and cantaloupes fine,
Her turtle and oysters, and terrapin stews,
And soft crabs, high zested with brandy and wine;
Ah! neither my heart from my native land weans,
When smokes on the table the pot of baked beans.

The pot of baked beans!—with what pleasure I saw it,
Well seasoned, well porked, by some rosy-faced dame;
And when from the glowing hot oven she'd draw it,
Well crisped and well browned to the table it came.
Oh! give me my country, the land of my teens,
Of the dark Indian puddings and pot of baked beans.

The pot of baked beans!—ah! the muse is too frail
Its taste to descant on, its virtues to tell,
But look at the sons of New England so hale,
And her daughters so rosy, 'twill teach thee full well;
Like me, it will teach thee to sigh for the means
Of health, and—of rapture!—the pot of baked beans.

JOTTINGS FROM EUROPEAN TRAVEL. NO. 4.

Our party came into "Florence, the Fair," upon a lovely July evening, and we found, when we drew up before our hotel, that the fates had been propitious, for we fronted upon the Arno, whose silvery waves, flashing in the moonlight, with the balmy air of Italy, so enchanted us we thought not of needed rest until a late hour. So thronged were our memories with what we wished to feast our eyes upon in this "Etrurian Athens," a quartette of our number were "on the wing" at an early morning hour, in order to visit the Protestant cemetery before our late breakfast. Our carriage ride took us in full view of the cathedral, campanile and baptistery, and, as these marble wonders of the world gleamed out in all their beauty in the morning sunlight, we were reminded of Hawthorne's charming description of them—particularly of the campanile, or "Giotto's Tower," as it is sometimes called. "It is like a toy of ivory, which some ingenious and pious monk might have spent his lifetime in adorning with sculptural designs and figures of saints; and when it was finished, seeing it so beautiful, he prayed that it might be miraculously magnified from the size of one foot to that of three hundred." The three buildings just named are built of black and white marble. The campanile, just described, is the gem. The cathedral is very striking from its size, it being five hundred and fifty feet long, and three hundred and forty feet broad, across the transept. The dome is even larger than that of St. Peter's at Rome. Michael Angelo, when setting out for Rome to model St. Peter's, turned to look upon this Il Duomo of Florence, and exclaimed, "I may build a greater dome, but I can never make one more beautiful." The baptistery has the wonderful doors—two by Pisano, one by Ghiberti. Concerning the latter Michael Angelo said, "It was worthy of being the gate of Paradise." It is composed of a group of Scripture scenes, brought out in bold relief, the whole in bronze. It is now dimmed with age, but must once have been very beautiful.

But we have digressed from the purpose with which we started out. Our plea for the inadvertence is, that these beautiful structures lay in our way, and could not be passed by. Leaving the city, our ride led us through the suburbs, filled in on either side with charming villas. They could not have laid her away to rest—the gifted Mrs. Browning—more fittingly than here, among the richest treasures of nature and art. We paid our tribute at the simple white marble shrine, and passed on to a shaft of Scotch granite, which bore the name, date of birth and death of Theodore Parker. Near by rests Richard Hildreth, farther on Walter Savage Landor, and other English and Americans, who sleep here, "after life's fitful fever." Returning, we pass the home of Powers, the sculptor. He, too, has passed away, but still lives in his work, and in that of his artist son. After breakfast our whole party sallied forth. Commencing with statuary, we were first shown Michael Angelo's David, a work ranking in artistic merit with his Moses, at Rome, and his Julius II. It is an immense piece of marble, but it did not strike our fancy, and we passed on to the hallowed recesses of the Uffizi Gallery. In the northern cities of Europe we had been enraptured with the works of the old masters in pictures, but here we first saw what divine forms human genius can bring forth from marble. The Niobe group are in a room by themselves. The grief depicted upon the face of this Mater Dolorosa, as she clings to her one remaining child, we can never forget. But the treasure-house is a small room called "the Tribune." Here the Venus De Medici is the central figure, with the Dancing Faun, the Wrestlers, the Apollini, and the Knife Grinder as attendants. The walls are hung with glowing pictures by Titian, Corregio and Raphael. The latter's Madonna of the Goldfinch charmed me most of all, though the beatific faces do not rise to the sublimity of the Sistine Madonna. We looked for the touching religious pictures by Fra Angelico, a pious monk, who never took up his brush without offering a prayer, and they satisfied our longings. In the Pitti Palace the gem is the "Madonna of the Chair," by Raphael.

We could have spent days amid these halls, filled with art treasures, collected mostly under the patronage of the De Medici. Although to us their name is a synonym of vice in every form, yet they were unlimited in their patronage of the arts. We were shown through the royal treasure house of this infamous family, and while gazing upon the glittering gems amassed by their avarice, our minds could but recall some of their infamous names, for there was a time when a De Medici controlled half the thrones in Europe. We seemed to hear the deep tones of the bell from the tower of St. Germain L'Auxenois, in Paris, which rang forth for the Massacre of St. Bartholomew's Day—a measure instigated by the infamous queen mother, Catharine De Medici. This Catholic dynasty would have crushed out Protestantism, if it were not that "the blood of the martyrs is the seed of the church." From this, their palace, we passed to their mausoleum, the Medicean chapel, upon which they lavished twenty-five millions of money. It is octagonal in form, built of white marble, and its interior walls are encrusted with gems and gold. Fifty of this detested race lie entombed here in marble cenotaphs. In the adjoining New Sacristy, one must not miss of seeing the statuary "Day and Night," and "Morning and Evening." Above the latter is the wonderful statute of Lorenzo De Medici. These are all by Michael Angelo, but they conduce more to his glory than to that of his patrons, the De Medici. The church of Santa Croce one must not miss, for here reposes most honored dust. Lord Byron says:

"In Santa Croce's holy precincts lie
Ashes which make a holier dust,
Which is, even in itself an immortality.
* * * here repose
Angelo's, Alferi's bones, and his,
The starry Galileo's with his woes—
Here Machiavelli's earth returned to whence it rose."

The tomb of Dante is here also, but not his ashes. They repose at Ravenna. The same quartette of the party who visited the Protestant cemetery at the early morning hour, made a pilgrimage to the home of Michael Angelo. It is a fortress-looking medieval mansion. The Florentines have ever delighted to do honor to their fellow citizen, and this retreat of his has been preserved from the ravages of time. The different apartments show his earliest essays at painting and sculpture, but the chief interest centres in his little oratory. Here were the divinities of his "Prie Dieu," the Holy Mary, and the sweet face of his dearest friend, Vittoria Colonna. After her death Michael Angelo wrote of her: "I was born a rough model, and it was for thee to reform and remake me." Returning thence to our hotel for our table d'hote, we afterward took carriages for a drive over the hills which form the amphitheatre in which Florence so prettily nestles. The city lies upon either side of the Arno, and is spanned by beautiful bridges. Towering above the numerous palaces and churches of the city is Il Duomo and the campanile, and the last rays of the sun gild their gorgeous figures. But it is not the city alone which presents attractions to us. Memories of our school days bring to our mind the description of Milton's Fiend, and his ponderous shield:

"He scarce had ceased, when the superior Fiend
Was moving toward the shore; his ponderous shield,
Ethereal temper, massy, large and round,
Behind him met; the broad circumference,
Hung on his shoulders like the moon, whose orb
Through optic glass the Tuscan artist views,
At evening, in the top of Fesole,
Or in Valdarno, to descry new lands,
Rivers or mountains on her spotty globe."

There was a tower upon the mountains of Fesole, directly across the valley from our stand point, which our guide designated as the identical summit from which Galileo, with his imperfect glass, discovered the satellites of Jupiter in 1610, which he named the Medican stars, in honor of the Medici family, who were his patrons. Another favorite point with Galileo for viewing the heavens was from the tower of St. Mark's Cathedral in Venice. He labored in vain to inculcate the Copernican system into the minds of the people of that age. At another point in our ride we gained a glimpse of the vale of Vallambrosa, again recalling Milton's figures—where he says:

"On the beach
Of that inflamed sea he stood and called
His legions; angel forms, which lay entranced
Thick as autumn leaves that strew the brooks
In Vallambrosa; where the Etrurian shades
High, over-arched, imbower."

Returning through the city in the long Italian twilight, many interesting localities were pointed out to us, the birth places both of Christopher Columbus and Americus Vespuccius, for both these soi-distant discoverers of the New World were Florentines. The natal spots of Machiavelli and Galileo were shown us, but our romance received a shock when we looked upon Casa Guidi, for the sweet poetical effusions of Mrs. Browning, from her Florentine retreat, had led us to look for anything but the plain, prosaic, cheerless building which was her home while there, and from whence her soul took its upward flight. But our day in Florence is fraught with cherished associations, which even the unromantic Casa Guidi cannot mar. M. J. S.

CUTE ELEPHANTS.—The elephants in Bridgeport are constantly making some new exhibition of sagacity and craftiness. Two of them had chills the other day, and were given four gallons of whiskey—a remedy greatly enjoyed by them. After the effects of the dose had passed off they commenced shivering again, as if another chill had come on, and caressed their master with their trunks, as much as to say, "Le's ha' s'more." But the keeper gave them to understand that they couldn't have any more, and in five minutes every indication of ague had vanished. They had been playing 'possum. The doctoring of these huge patients is quite expensive business. The mother of the baby elephant was given four quinine pills the other day, each one costing $5.

A young man who had inherited the day before a large fortune from his uncle gave a dinner to a few friends. He inquired at the restaurant if they had any old cheese. "Yes," replied the waiter. "Is it strong?" "Strong enough to bring the dead to life." "I don't want it," replied the heir.

The Japanese keep grasshoppers in cages as domestic pets, treat dogs and cats with distinguished consideration, provide horses and oxen with straw socks, regard it as a high honor to own a donkey, revere the fox and almost worship the rabbit.

A mother trying to get her little daughter of three years to sleep one night, said, "Annie, why don't you try to go to sleep?" "I am trying." "But you haven't shut your eyes." "Well, I can't help it; ums come unbuttoned."

The nightingale is the most human bird in existence. He leaves off singing and goes to croaking as soon as he has a family, but if he loses his mate he will go to singing cheerfully till he finds another mate.

A young man, while out searching for his father's pig, accosted an Irishman as follows: "Have you seen a stray pig about here?" Pat responded: "Faix, how could I tell a stray pig from any other?"

What a merry sound the scrape of the snow shovel has upon the morning air! Especially if you are snug in bed, and somebody else is doing the shoveling.

The Journal.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 19, 1881.

SENATOR CONKLING visited Gen. Garfield at Mentor Wednesday, and was closeted with him several hours. Something's up now, surely, and cabinet prophecies have received a fresh impetus.

GEN. HANCOCK don't seem to care to officiate at his own funeral. He has been invited to attend the inauguration ceremonies at Washington, and in acknowledging receipt of the invitation, says: "Should I conclude to be present, I will notify you later."

PHILADELPHIA on Tuesday elected a Democratic mayor, and the regular Republican candidate for tax gatherer was also defeated by the reform candidate by a large majority. The city has long been run by the "bosses," but the people are beginning to rebel against their mismanagement.

THE Pennsylvania Legislature seems no nearer electing a United States Senator now than it was before the withdrawal of Oliver and Grow last week. The anti-Cameron Republicans are determined to have one Senator who will represent the State rather than Don Cameron—a commendable determination, in which we hope they will succeed.

CONGRESSMAN FERNANDO WOOD of New York died at the Hot Springs, Ark., last Sunday night, at the age of 69. Mr. Wood was mayor of New York at the breaking out of the Rebellion, and wanted the city to secede from the State and set up on its own hook as a "free city." He had been in Congress many years, but had much more of a reputation as a Democratic politician than as a statesman.

THE storms of last week caused immense floods, and did much damage in various parts of the country. Washington was badly flooded, portions of Pennsylvania avenue being covered with water, and about 200 feet of the long bridge across the Potomac was carried away Saturday, much other damage also being done. At the West there were violent snow storms, and the railroads have been blockaded worse than at any other time during the Winter.

STANLEY MATTHEWS has given up all hope of being confirmed as judge of the Supreme Court, and has left Washington for home. The judiciary committee of the Senate evidently purpose to take no action on the nomination, and unless President Hayes withdraws his name and sends in some other, Garfield will have a chance to fill the vacancy. The country will be quite willing to wait, if Mr. Hayes cannot make a better choice than Matthews.

NORTHAMPTON is generously remembered in the will of the late Judge Charles E. Forbes, who bequeaths $220,000, and as much more as the estate will warrant, in trust to the town for a free public library. Of this sum $50,000 is set apart for the building, the income of $150,000 for the purchase of books, and the income of $20,000 for the running expenses. The town already has some 13,000 volumes in a library building which cost about $70,000, with a fund of $30,000 for its maintenance.

THE Boston correspondent of a Hartford paper says that when the new depot of the Boston & Albany road in that city is completed, the general offices of the road will be removed there, leaving Springfield with nothing but a division superintendent. If this report is true, it will cause wailing and gnashing of teeth in our fair neighboring city. But then, she need not feel utterly desolate, for the Republican will be left—that wide-awake model of newspaper enterprise which gives more life and fame to the city than a dozen railroad offices would. However, she is likely to retain both, as President Bliss says the managers of the road have no thought of moving the offices.

IF Minnesota accepts the proposition of Selah Chamberlain of Cleveland, O., she will partly, though not wholly, relieve herself from the shame of repudiation. Mr. Chamberlain is the largest holder of the State's repudiated bonds, and he now offers to accept half the amount due him if the State will submit the question of their legality to its supreme court, pledging himself to burn up the bonds if the court decides that they are not valid. The Legislature will be tempted to end the matter by paying him 50 per cent of his claim, but its repudiation will be more glaring than ever if the State should let the remaining 50 per cent go unpaid, after a decision from its highest court that the bonds are a legal claim against the State.

THE prison commission condemn the Springfield jail in unmeasured terms, and think the county commissioners do not pay much attention to the advice given them in regard to it. The members of the commission ought to know that the commissioners never were noted for taking good advice. We should have had fewer bridges, if they had been. As to this jail, the commission say:

This prison is a standing disgrace to the county and State, and were it dealt with as it deserves would be speedily abated as a public nuisance. It has been repeatedly condemned by the prison commission, by legislative and local committees, and by the public press. But the county commissioners have hitherto turned a deaf or indifferent ear to these criticisms; suggested improvements have not been adopted, and original defects have degenerated into positive abominations, so that there is now a loud call to "reform it altogether" by building a new prison in another party of the city. The women's department of this prison is unimproved and unimprovable, and utterly unfit for the habitation of any considerable number of prisoners, as all the sun which enters this part of the building is admitted through a few panes of glass in a single window in the south end of the prison.

AT THE STATE HOUSE.

Our Legislature seems inclined to take the back track on the question of economy. Two years ago there was a general cutting down of salaries, in response to the popular demand for retrenchment, so skillfully used by Butler for his own advancement; but now nearly every person who then suffered a reduction of pay has petitioned for an increase, and our Solons appear to be willing to give it. Better go slow, gentlemen. An advance may be just in some cases, but anything like a general boosting of salaries is sure to meet with disapproval among the people.

Representative Higginson's attempt to strike out the clause in the General Statutes which allows the credibility of witnesses to be affected by a disbelief in the existence of God, has been defeated, by a vote of 94 to 61. The principal speech against the measure was by Mr. McGeough of Boston, a Catholic.

Bills have been reported making New Year's day and Memorial day legal holidays. The former bill was defeated Wednesday by a heavy vote, but the Senate has passed the last-named bill.

The committee on woman suffrage has reported a bill amending the act giving women the right to vote for school committee, so that they can vote on all matters pertaining to schools; changing their time of qualification for voting to agree with that of men; reducing their poll tax to 50 cents; and allowing their names to remain on the voting lists, when once entered, the same as men's.

The committee on taxation reported it inexpedient to incorporate villages in towns for purposes of raising money by taxation for village improvements.

The tunnel committee has reported a bill allowing the railroad commissioners to authorize the running of such through trains Sunday on any railroad as the board may deem necessary or convenient.

The House on Wednesday rejected the bill requiring cities to pay all laborers weekly, whose wages do not exceed $2 a day, the vote standing 131 to 81. Representatives Cushman of Monson and Peck of Wilbraham dissented from the favorable report of the labor committee on the bill.

A bill has been reported incorporating the States Union Telegraph and Telegraph Construction Co., with a capital of $500,000 and the right to increase it to $10,000,000. There are strict provisions against the line being leased or sold to or united with any other company.

The members of the House have voted to have a dinner, for the purpose of promoting mutual acquaintance.

THE United States Senate on Thursday voted in favor of a 3 per cent bond for refunding, and also adopted the clause compelling national banks to accept these bonds as the only security for their circulation. After a week's hard work the House succeeded in passing the river and harbor bill, all the appropriations for insignificant streams being retained.

The experiment of cod-fishing with a seine has been successfully tried by the schooner Northern Eagle, of Gloucester. On one trip she took 35,000 pounds, of which 8,000 pounds were taken in a single morning. On a subsequent trip she also took 35,000 pounds, of which 18,000 pounds were taken in a single day, her catch being three times as large as that of the trawlers fishing on the same grounds. The United States Fish Commissioners are much pleased with the success of the enterprise, which was entered upon at their suggestion, and will soon publish and circulate among the fishing towns an illustrated circular describing the manner and showing the advantages of this method of fishing.

They have been having some dreadfully cold weather down in Connecticut. In proof of this statement, it is related that a man at Litchfield went out to pump water for his stock the other morning, and not returning at noon his wife went after him, and found him at the well, turning the crank for dear life. A hole in the tub had let some of the water out, which, flowing around his boots, had frozen solid, holding him fast in his tracks. To keep from freezing to death he kept pumping, although he had pumped the well dry. Procuring a lot of salt, she piled it up around his boots and succeeded in setting him free—not daring to use an axe for fear of cutting him.

The members of the 27th Mass. Regiment are to have a rally at Springfield next Tuesday, in honor of the return to Gen. Lee of the three flags lost at Drury's Bluff, May 16, 1864. Chaplain Woodworth will deliver an address, and Gen. Heckman and other officers of the brigade are expected to be present.

The recent thaw has demonstrated the fact that the water famine in New York is not due to lack of water in the Croton valley, but to insufficient storage capacity in the reservoirs. In less than two days the water rose 49 inches at the Croton dam, and a vast supply is running to waste over it.

Holbrook has already received 700 tons this week, and has 3000 tons more on the way. This will satisfy the immediate demand, though even this amount will not fill all the orders Mr. Holbrook has in.

The recent thaw seemed to send the frost still further into the ground, and a number of water pipes which went through the coldest weather all right are now frozen up, so that several families on Main and Knox streets are obliged to obtain all the water they use from outside sources. Mr. and Mrs. C. M. Dyer of Worcester, who are known to a number of our people, Mrs. Dyer being a sister of Mrs. M. W. French of this place, have written a letter to the Piedmont church in that city, notifying them that they would give to the society, as soon as it can be secured and placed in position, an organ suitable for their wants and in keeping with the size and interior finish of the church. The society has been engaged in an effort to reduce its debt, and this generous gift is very opportune.

The big "Lovett Eames" locomotive, which it is claimed can take a train over the rails at the rate of 90 miles an hour, and is being tried on different railroads to show the efficacy of the vacuum brake, took the morning accommodation train east last Saturday, and brought it back in the evening. Quite a number of people were at the depot to see the machine, which differs from ordinary locomotives in a number of respects. There is but one pair of driving wheels, which are 7 feet in diameter, and the engineer is alone in a small cab over the boiler, the fireman doing his work in the open air.

Park street was flooded to an almost impassable extent by last Saturday's rain and thaw. Between School and Central streets the road and walks were covered with an unbroken sheet of water a foot or more deep, and the only chance for pedestrians to get through was by boat. The street was also covered to a greater or less extent for a large part of the way between Central and Thorndike streets. North Main street was similarly flooded in front of Joseph Thompson's house, the sewer at that point not being equal to the demands upon it. A part of School street, and a large portion of the school house yard were also covered with water. There is the same story of flooded streets and grounds every Spring, and it is about time that decisive steps were taken toward putting in more and larger drains in the village.

The farmers' institute which was held at the Weeks House on Tuesday was one of the most interesting and best attended that has yet been held, about 100 farmers and others being present. H. M. Sessions of Hampden read a paper in the morning on "Some of the Best Paying Crops." He believed corn to be the most profitable crop, although a farmer's circumstances and the condition of the land would need to be taken into consideration. He considered grass the next best crop for farmers in New England, and exhibited specimens of grasses, explaining their peculiar qualities and uses. Tobacco, as a whole, he believed to be a most unprofitable crop. Dr. Wakefield also made some interesting comments on grasses. After dinner Dea. D. C. Jones of Ludlow took up the subject of ensilage, and was followed by Mr. Stockbridge, son of Prof. Stockbridge of Amherst, who spoke quite at length and in a very interesting manner of the growth and chemistry of corn, giving analyses of the crop at different stages, and also showing the chemical changes which take place in ensilage, by which there is a net loss of 17 per cent in its nutritive qualities. He was not prepared to state what loss there was in the curing of hay, so that the comparative value of the two could not be shown. Mr. Stockbridge answered a good many questions in a prompt and satisfactory manner, which showed that he was thoroughly at home on the subject of chemistry. At the next meeting, in March, the subject for consideration will be "Stock; the Raising and Feeding of it."

The boiler in E. D. Shaw's mill burst last week Friday morning, soon after the mill started, but no one was injured. The trustees of Monson Academy have been fortunate in securing George J. Cummings, M. A., as principal of this well-known institution. Prof. Cummings was graduated at Dartmouth College in 1869. Immediately after his graduation, he was engaged as teacher of Latin and natural sciences at Kimball Union Academy, at Meriden, N. H., at which he was fitted for college. After teaching there six years, he became principal, which position he filled for five years. Kimball Union Academy has been one of the main fitting schools for Dartmouth College. Prof. Cummings resigned his position at Meriden last Summer, with the highest commendations of the trustees and patrons. It is confidently expected that Monson Academy, under his charge, will regain its old position of influence and usefulness. Prof. Cummings will commence his duties at the opening of the Spring term, March 16th.

The gathering of surviving members of the 27th Mass Regt. at Springfield next Tuesday to welcome back their old battle flags will without doubt be very large, and the occasion full of interest. A. A. Gage, our popular town clerk, was one of the color bearers at the time the regiment was captured, and gives us these particulars of the battle: On May 16th, 1864, before Drury's Bluff, 253 members of the regiment with three colors were forced to surrender after a desperate resistance. After three days of continuous fighting, under cover of a dense fog the enemy at daybreak made three desperate charges, only to be repulsed each time with terrible slaughter, the gallant 27th refusing to yield an inch. Again the enemy charged more desperately than before, and while the 27th were meeting them with an unbroken front a cruel volley cut through them from the rear. Turning, they beheld a large force of the enemy charging them from the rear, a position which they had secured unknown to the 27th. As coolly as though on dress parade, they met the enemy with one sharp volley, when finding themselves surrounded on all sides by vastly superior numbers, their only duty was to surrender. About 130 of those captured died in Andersonville, and the colors were supposed to have been destroyed in the conflagration at the capture of Richmond, but were recently found among the rebel archives and returned by the government to the regiment. Quite a large number from this section went out in Co. I, and many of them will be present at the exercises next Tuesday.

Harvey L. Spicer, who died the 4th inst., was one of the old stand-bys of the Geo. H. Gilbert Mfg. Company, having been in the employ of Geo. H. Gilbert and the present corporation for 27 years, as foreman of their wool sorting. He was one who was always faithful to the trusts committed to his charge.

The average circulation of books from the public library during the past year was at the rate of 470 volumes per week. The largest number given out in one week was 637. The reading of books of fiction is gradually decreasing. Many of the school children take out books of history, and biography, to assist them in their studies.

FIRES.—A button shop and other property to the amount of $200,000 was burned at Waterbury, Ct., early Sunday morning.—— A tank containing 9000 barrels of naphtha, at Bergen Point, N. The American Rapid Telegraph Company, beside the low rates it offers to the public, issues stamps, similar to postage stamps, of denominations of 1, 5, 15 and 20 cents, which can be purchased in any quantity, and which senders of messages can affix to their dispatches, prepaying them as they do a letter. This avoids all trouble about making change, and will be a great convenience in many ways.

The subject of a division of the State is agitated in California, especially in the southern portion, which is agricultural and has a great deal of the old Spanish element. The social customs of the people in the two sections of the State are very dissimilar, and the climate and scenery are also quite different.

As an example of what frost will do, it is stated that a section of a rail on the Chicago & Alton road, less than two feet in length, was found crumbled into 76 pieces, and another section on the Chicago & Northwestern, six feet in length, was broken into 180 pieces.

MISHAPS AND MISDEEDS.

Another murder was committed in Berkshire county Sunday night, by Jerry Winchell, an ex-convict, living at South Egremont. He went to the house of James Bunce, near the New York line, and going into the kitchen attempted to take liberties with Mrs. Harriet Morrison, a woman 35 years of age, who was employed by Bunce. A struggle ensued, and she ran into the bed room where Bunce was sick. Winchell followed and threw her upon the bed, when Bunce seized a loaded gun to drive him off. Winchell then grappled with him, and in the struggle for the gun it went off, killing Mrs. Morrison. Winchell was arrested the same night. He is a hard character, and has served a term of six years in prison for rape. He was under the influence of liquor at the time.

Literary Notes.

Mrs. Oakley's "Recollections of American Society," continued in the March Scribner, give some pleasant glimpses of old times and of noted people. We have John Randolph of Roanoke, speaking on the tariff in the Senate—"a tall, slight man, with long thin legs in buckskin breeches, high-topped boots, blue coat and brass buttons," and "carrying a short cane or whipstock in his hand," "extending two fingers, and speaking in a high, thin voice;" Charles Sumner, in 1831, riding from Cambridge to Boston on a velocipede, propelled by putting the feet to the ground; John Vaughan, of Philadelphia, wearing a plaid cloak, and carrying about with him, on his regular rounds, a red-and-white striped umbrella (because no one would steal it), and putting the city in commotion by being carried off by the ferry-boat. Allston wearing a green coat to suit his pale complexion and white hair, and dodging visitors to his studio; Irving going to sleep after dinner, shedding tears over a ballad, and receiving grateful compliments as a father of a family from a woman whose children he amused on a journey:—these, with the more general accounts of New York, Philadelphia and Boston society, and the fashions of the time, make up a readable magazine paper.

Readers of St. Nicholas who remember Mrs. Oliphant's charming "Windsor Castle Papers," which appeared in that magazine two years ago, will welcome her stories of "Lady Jane Grey," and "Mary, Queen of Scots," the first of which is to appear in the March St. Nicholas, illustrated with a frontispiece portrait, in antique setting. This number has also some interesting recollections of Adeline Patti. Years ago, it will be remembered, Patti traveled through the United States with Ole Bull, and Maurice Strakosch, then the leading pianist of the day. The largest letters on the posters spelled out: "MADEMOISELLE ADELINA PATTI, AGED ELEVEN YEARS. THE WONDERFUL CHILD PRIMA DONNA!" Two little girls, in Wilmington, Delaware, spent a never-to-be-forgotten rainy day playing with the little lady, when she passed through Wilmington, and one of them now writes out the story of the day's adventures.

The new version of the New Testament, which has been so many years in course of translation, and which is unquestionably the most important literary enterprise this century has seen, is being waited for with curiosity and anxiety by hundreds of thousands. A first edition of 500,000 copies has already been manufactured in England, and 100,000 copies are said to be already in New York city, not one of them permitted to be sold. They are awaiting a telegram from the authorities in England authorizing their issue. The first copies can only be had at the extravagant price of $10 per copy. The Literary Revolution has made arrangements to put the entire book into type inside of twenty-four hours from the time a printed copy of the English edition can be procured, and within three days at least 10,000 copies will be ready for delivery to purchasers, and at least 5,000 copies will be manufactured every day thereafter until the demand is met. It will be printed in large type, neatly and strongly bound in cloth, in a volume of about 500 pages, and sold at the nominal price of 30 cents. A fine edition in half Russia, gilt top, will be sold for 60 cents, and one in full Turkey morocco, gilt edges, for $1.25. Orders will be filled in the order in which they are received, with remittance. American Book Exchange, New York.

The Atlantic Monthly for March has generous installments of the serial stories by Elizabeth Stuart Phelps and Henry James, Jr., both of which are sure to have wide reading without any special urgency on the part of critics. Perhaps the most noteworthy paper in the number, and one that ought to be read by every good American citizen, is the "Story of a Great Monopoly," by H. D. Lloyd which gives an account of the origin and growth of "The Standard Oil Company," revealing the steps by which, from insignificant beginnings, a power has been grasped which is able to purchase legislatures and courts, and seems almost equal to defying the authority of the government. Mr. Grant Allen contributes an article on "The Genius of Genius," in reply to the article by Mr. William James on "Great Men, Great Thoughts, and the Environment" which appeared in the Atlantic for October. Another paper that will be read with general interest is "The End of the War," by Theodore Bacon. Katharine Carrington furnishes a short story called "The Eleventh Hour," Richard Grant White writes "Random Recollections of England," and there are poems by Dr. Holmes, Rose Terry Cooke, Frances L. Mace, and Maurice Thompson, besides other articles of interest and value. Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston.

Gull Island, at the end of Long Island Sound, owned by Capt. Brooks, who keeps the light house, is a great breeding place for gulls and a source of profit to its owner, who sells the gull's eggs. They have no fishy taste, but, on the contrary, are superior to hens' eggs, selling for fifty cents a dozen when the latter are worth only twenty-five.

The total number of blacks in all the Southern States except Texas was 2,242,003 in 1870 and 5,649,891 in 1880. This shows during these ten years the enormous increase of 1,401,888, or more than 33 per cent.

NEVER RETURN.—It is said that one out of every four real invalids who go to Denver, Col., to recover health never return to the West or South except as a corpse. The undertakers, next to the hotel-keepers, have the most profitable business. This excessive mortality may be prevented and patients served and cured under the care of friends and loved ones at home, if they will but use Hop Bitters in time. This we know. See other column.

Westboro, Jan. 25. 1881.

Willard's Patent Truss seems to possess some principles of mechanism well calculated to reach a large number of cases of Hernia hitherto uncontrolled by instruments in common use. THE CONGREGATIONALIST.

Rev. E. P. Roe, well known as a Presbyterian clergyman, and whose books have become almost as familiar as household words, commences his story, "WITHOUT A HOME," in the Congregationalist, Feb. 9. Mr. Roe has sat with judges day after day in the police courts in New York, and has been accumulating his material for this book for several years, and it will undoubtedly be the BEST from his pen thus far.

We shall also print during the year twelve articles under the head "Great Questions" on such topics as The Creation, Trial by Jury, The Question of Divorce, Suffrage and the Ballot, The Woman Question. Among the writers will be men of the first rank, such as Prof. Austin Phelps, Presidents Porter and Bartlett, Dr. Mark Hopkins, Dr. Geo. M. Beard, Judge William Strong, Gen. J. R. Hawley, and Hon. Dorman B. Eaton.

Mr. Roe's story will continue for nine or ten months, and in order to accommodate the thousands desiring the paper it will be sent till the close of the serial for $2.00. Address

"In a Horn."

Lives there a man with a nose grown red,
Who never to himself has said—
"This is the time to take a horn?"
Whose heart within him hath not yearned,
When 'round the tavern's corner turned,
To try once more that liquid horn?
If such there be, go mark him down
As the most flagrant fraud in town!
Who hides his jug, deceives his friends,
And drinks alone for selfish ends.
Yet, when the secret fount is dry,
Will skirmish rum-mills on the sly,
And, doubly drinking, will go down
To the vile haunts—already sprung—
Unseen, unfollowed, and unhung.

A GOOD NATURED EDITOR.

We were grieved to read, the other day, of the death of one of Michigan's jolliest pioneer editors, almost the last man of a band who published weeklies in the State when a coon-skin would pay for a column "ad," and the bushels of corn, dumped on the office floor, stood for a year's subscription. Never a publisher was more liberal with his space. It was hard work for him to charge for anything except the tax list and mortgage sales, and he measured short even on them. One day, in the year gone by, his paper copied an attack on a country officer, and old Mark was dozing at his desk when the injured party stalked in and began:

"You are a coward, sir; a——coward!"

"Mebbe I am," was the editor's complacent reply.

"And I can lick you, sir; lick you out of your wrinkled old boots!"

"I guess you could," answered Mark, as he busted the wrapper off his only exchange.

"I'm going to write an article calling you a fool, liar, coward, cur, slanderer and body-snatcher, and go over to Ionia and pay five cents a line to have it published!"

"Hey?" queried the old man, as he wheeled around.

"Yes, I'll pay five cents a line to have it published!"

"Say, let me tell you something," replied Mark; "I've got two hundred more circulation than the Banner, and I'll publish your attack on me for two cents a line and take it out in mill-feed or corn-stalks! Don't trot over to Ionia when you can help build up your own town!"

Mark would have published it word for word, just as he said, and thrown in the cut of a horse or a stump-puller free gratis, but the officer cooled off.

BURDETTE IN HARTFORD.—It was a bitter cold day when the traveling combination which I have the honor to feed gathered its solitary valise and stepped ashore at Hartford. The Dutch found this beautiful city here nearly 250 years ago, and the first thing they did was to establish Colt's armory and go into the insurance business. You can get insured here in any way and for anything you wish—mutual, endowment, tontine, accident, intentional, nomadic, differential, protoplasmic, Baptist, old school, Presbyterian, Congregational, Bob Ingersoll, renaissance, Gothic, Byzantine, greenback, composite, Corinthian, Scotch, cheviot, gossamer, seamless, new Wheeler & Wilson, barbed wire, liver pad, and hard finish. It is the central and distributing point for the entire insurance business of America. No insurance company is genuine unless "Hartford" is blown upon the bottle.

New England has one and a half miles of railroad to every 1000 of population, the Middle States one and one-third miles, and in general this is the proportion on the Atlantic coast. The territories, which have added in 1880 two-thirds to their total mileage at the close of 1879, have now over five miles of road to every 1000 of population; the Pacific States have three miles to every 1000, and the States in the new northwest have nearly four miles to every 1000.

The catacombs of Paris are said to contain the bones of over 3,000,000 people. The number is added to every year by the removal of bodies from the cemeteries to make room for newcomers. This practice has been carried on for over one hundred years, and no person's body remains in a cemetery after a certain number of years unless the lot is held in perpetuity. The majority of lots are only sold for a certain number of years.

A gentleman who is fond of horses attended church recently where there is a somewhat prolonged service before they come to the sermon. "How were you pleased with the services?" asked a friend. "Oh, very much, though it did strike me that there was a good deal of scoring before they got off."

A Galveston widow is about to marry her fifth husband. Her pastor rebuked her for contemplating matrimony so soon again. "Well, I just want you to understand, if the Lord keeps on taking them I will too," was the spirited reply.

A photographer recently acted as master of ceremonies at a friend's funeral, and as he lifted the coffin lid for the mourners to look at the remains, whispered to the corpse, "Now, look natural." Force of habit.

A traveling printer, who for want of employment at his trade went to work on a farm, came in one day to ask his employer if a hen should be set solid.—Boston Commercial Bulletin.

Whenever young ladies learn so to stick a pin in their apron strings that it won't scratch a fellow's wrist, there will be more marriages.—Turner's Falls Reporter.

A little boy at his first concert innocently asked, when a singer was encored, "What's the matter, mother, didn't she do it right?"

A cute observer remarks that "the man who stops his paper to economize is like a man who goes barefoot to save his shoes."

A hypocrite is a man who tries to be pious, but can't—with a preponderance of cant.

DEADLY SECRETS.

In passing through the American department of the Paris Exposition of 1878, an exhibitor from this country stopped us and introduced himself.

"I heard you preach last night in the American Chapel, and so I ventured to address you." Among many things, the Christian exhibitor told us that several of his own countrymen endeavored to entice him into houses of "death," that he might see "life."

"It is well," they said, "to gratify a little curiosity when away from home, and in this gay capital."

"I told them," said the man, "that I could not visit the place named without receiving some taint. I left home pure, and I want to meet my wife and children in America without a blush. And, sir, the words that have helped me through all these weeks are, 'O my soul, come not thou into their secret; unto their assembly, mine honor, be not thou united.' I will have nothing to do with the vile haunts of this city; nor will I, God helping me, obtain an experimental knowledge of their damning secrets."

We have thought many times of the words first used by the patriarch Jacob, in memory of the cruelties and fatal secrets of Simon and Levi, and employed by this exhibitor as a frequent address to his soul and to his sense of honor.

The hidden has a charm for many. Curiosity leads frequently into the realm of the forbidden. There is a fascination about the denied. Many young men do not so much consider the philosophy of the denial, as they do the fact that something is denied them, for whom, they think, there should be no forbidden ground. They love to run risks. This love is taken advantage of by villains who present temptations. The approaches of these destroyers of virtue are skillful. They appeal to prurient curiosity, by speaking of the attractions of the forbidden, by describing the haunts of sinful pleasure.

Well were it if each could say: "O my soul, come not thou into their secret; unto their assembly, mine honor, be not thou united."

In Marlow's Faust the Doctor is represented as exclaiming to Lucifer, in passionate accents: "O, might I see hell and return again safe! How happy were I then!"

The seeing of these earthly hells forbids the safe returns. No one who has made the circuit of vice and has had even a surface knowledge of its secrets, can return as unsullied as he went.

All of us have enough to do in resisting temptation, without voluntarily going into sin and tempting ourselves.

Many dare to sin who do not dare to do right. When any one enters the secrets of the vile and joins the assembly of the wicked, he will find it difficult to escape, and impossible to forget the evil. The sin and memory seem to have formed an eternal league. Then, let each say with an emphasis, such as that given by the Christian Exhibitor at Paris; an emphasis born of a condition of the right, and a resolve to do the right: "O my soul, come not thou into their secret; unto their assembly, mine honor, be not thou united."—Golden Rule.

A rumseller in Lewiston, Me., having challenged several jurors, was informed by the Bench that he must give good and sufficient reason for such action. "May it please yer Honor, Mr. Judge," said the accused with mock gravity, "I would a good deal rather be tried by a man that doesn't know me, than by a man that does." The dignity of the whole court-room gave way at the richness of this bull, and it was several minutes before the Judge himself regained his composure. The prisoner then pleaded guilty without a trial.

MINING UNDER THE SEA.—A number of English coal mines are being worked under the ocean. In Northumberland the net available quantity of coal under the sea is estimated at 403,000,000 tons, and on the Durham coast under the sea, including a breadth of 3½ square miles, with an area of 71 square miles, 734,500,000 tons. The latter mine is in a vein of an aggregate thickness of 30 feet, distributed in six seams. Engineers are considering how it can be worked successfully in the future.

Old gentleman military man, guest of the Squire's, conversing with smart-looking rustic: "Wounded in the Crimea, were you? Badly?" Rustic: "The bullet hit me in the chist, here, sure, an' came out at me back." Old gentleman: "The deuce! Come, come, Pat, that won't do. Why, it would have gone right through your heart, man!" Rustic: "Och, faix me heart was in me mouth at the thoime, surr!"

A close student of human nature says that "when you see a young man and woman walking down the street leaning against each other like a pair of badly matched oxen, it is a pretty good sign that they are bent on consolidation."

"Oh, dear," exclaimed a young lady, entering a public hall the other evening, "what a dreadful odor of carburetted hydrogen." "That's no kind 'o gin," replied the janitor; "that's gars, the pipes is leaky, mum."

A man who keeps riches and enjoys them not, is like an ass that carries gold and eats thistles.

"YOU DON'T KNOW THEIR VALUE."—"They cured me of ague, biliousness and kidney complaint, as recommended. I had a half bottle left which I used for my two little girls, whom the doctors and neighbors said could not be cured. I am confident I should have lost both of them one night if I had not had the Hop Bitters in my house to use. I found they did them so much good I continued with them, and they are now well.—That is why I say you do not know half the value of Hop Bitters, and do not recommend them highly enough."—B., Rochester, N. Y.

Because composed of malt and hops, without fermentation, Malt Bitters are popular.

Good Manners at the Dinner Table.

Good manners, when carefully heeded at home,
Will carry politeness wherever you roam.

Gaze not at a guest, nor at any one's plate,
Nor boorishly hold up your knife and fork straight.

Forbear at the table to mimic the ape,
Nor spread out your limbs in an uncomely shape.

Rest not on your elbows, or fork or spoon lick,
Nor finger the forelock, nor use a tooth-pick.

Speak never of sickness, nor death of a friend,
Nor nauseous nostrums, till dinner shall end.

Beware, when at home, or abroad, of the fault,
Of thrusting your knife in the butter or salt.

Smack not with your lips, neither glower around,
Nor swallow your coffee with gurgling sound.

No one should be guilty, wherever one goes,
Of hemming and hawking and blowing the nose.

Raise not an unsavory dish to the nose,
Nor turn it to scan it suspiciously close.

If knife, fork or spoon chance to fall on the floor,
Defer not to wipe, and unsullied restore.

When butter is furnished with insipid hair,
Remove it, unnoticed, affecting no care.

Cut thin and small slices; but eat with a fork;
And turn from the table when drawing a cork.

The carver, when carving and serving the meat,
Should deem it unskillful to rise from his seat.

When serving the courses, distribute the best
To matrons or sages, or some honored guest.

Let gourmands and gluttons beware of the sin
Of ending their courses ere others begin.

Mince not between courses, when you've had enough,
And turn from the table to stifle a cough.

Sip not your hot coffee, nor blow your hot meat,
Nor gulp them untasted, nor surlily eat.

Good manners at dinner forbid one to look
At letters, or papers, or read in a book.

Be cheerful, feel grateful, whenever your food
Is wholesome and fragrant, all steaming and good.

When one cannot eat what is as dry as a stick,
True etiquette warrants the plea, "I am sick!"

When leaving untimely, say, "Will you excuse?"
Thus honor your manners, nor credit abuse.

Suck not your soup with a bubbling sound,
Nor heedlessly spatter the gravy around.

Encircling the table, say something; yet fear
To speak in a whisper what others may hear.

Say something; yet, after another's begun,
Forbear interrupting until he is done.

Say something, if naught but "This sugar is sweet,"
Or coffee is fragrant, or juicy the meat.

—S. E. T., in Rural New Yorker.

APPRECIATION.

"Just what I have expected for about seven years," said Pauline Worthington, looking up from an open letter in her hand with a frowning brow.

"Is not your letter from Herbert, Lina?" questioned Mrs. Worthington, a silvery-haired old lady with a gentle expression.

"Yes, mother, Essie is very ill with a low, nervous fever, and they want me to come and stay until she is better. The carriage will be sent at 3 o'clock. Mother," and Miss Pauline's eyes snapped, "I think it is about time Bert's tyranny over that little martyr was ended. He's killing her."

"Lina! he is your brother."

"I can see his faults, if he is."

"I never hear Essie complain."

"She never would. But look at her. Nine years ago, when she was married, she was a lovely sunbeam, so bright and pretty. Now pale, quiet and reserved, her voice is seldom heard, her smile seldom seen. A wintry shadow of her former summer brightness! Now broken down. You have never seen her at home, but surely when she is here you will see the change."

"Yes, dear, she has changed; but family cares and—"

"Has Louie changed so? She has been twelve years married."

Mrs. Worthington was silent. Louie was her oldest child, and presided over the home in which her mother had been a crippled prisoner for fifteen years. She took all the household cares, and had five children, and yet Louie had gained in beauty, and certainly in cheerful happiness since her marriage, even if the gaiety of girlhood was gone.

"Henry appreciates Louie," said Lina; "there lies the difference between her happiness and Essie's dejection. If there is any domestic trouble Henry and Louie share it, while Herbert shifts it all upon Essie. He is an habitual fault-finder."

"Perhaps, dear, Essie is not as good a housekeeper as Louie. Herbert may have good reason to find fault."

"Once in ten times he may. I never saw a faultless house or housekeeper; but Essie and her house are the nearest approach to perfection I ever did see."

"You never spoke so before, Lina!"

"Because Louie and I thought it best not to worry you with a trouble beyond your help. But firmly believing as I do now, that Herbert is actually worrying his wife into the grave, I intend to give him a lesson; that is, if you can spare me to go."

"You must go, dear. I shall get along nicely."

So when Herbert Worthington sent his carriage, Lina was quite ready for the fourteen-mile drive to her brother's house, wherein an evil spirit of repining or fault-finding should not have found an abode. Spacious, handsomely furnished, with well-trained servants, and all the comforts wealth could furnish, it seemed a perfect paradise on earth to visitors. But a very demon lurked there to poison all, and this demon Lina had come to exorcise.

For the first fortnight Essie took all her time and care, the gentle spirit hovering very near the portal of the eternal home. There was a baby, too, six months old, and its wants filled all the spare moments. Herbert snarled and fretted over domestic shortcomings, but Lina premptorily forbade all mention of these in the sick room, having the doctor's authority for saying that the patient's very life depended upon quiet.

But when convalescence commenced, Lina sent Essie and the baby to visit old Mrs. Worthington, and took control of Herbert, the older children and the household, fully determined to show her brother how far he had carried his absurd fault-finding.

The first dinner saw the beginning of the lesson Lina meant to teach, by practically illustrating some of Herbert's absurdities. He entered the dining-room, his handsome face disfigured by a frown.

"Soup," said Herbert, lifting the tureen cover, "perfect dish-water!"

"Susan," said Lina, sharply, before Herbert could lift the ladle, "take that tureen to the kitchen, and tell Jane the soup is not fit to eat."

Susan promptly obeyed.

Herbert looked rather ruefully at the vanishing dish. He was especially fond of soup, and the savory fumes of the delicious dish were tantalizing. Essie would have made some gentle excuse—never whipped off his dinner in that way.

All dinner time Lina kept up a ding-dong at Susan about that abominable soup, till Herbert wished he had said nothing about it. But his imagination had detected a burnt flavor in the pudding, and before he could remonstrate, that dish had followed the soup.

"I'll get this house in some kind of order before I leave it," said Lina, very emphatically.

"Before you leave it," said Herbert, sharply. "Do you suppose you are a better housekeeper than Essie? Why, I have not a friend who does not envy me the exquisite order of my house and my dainty table."

"Herbert, you surprise me. Only yesterday I heard you say you did wish there was ever anything fit to eat on the table."

"One don't expect every word to be taken literally," said Herbert, sulkily. But an hour later, finding a streak of dust in the sitting-room, he declared emphatically, "it was not fit for a pig to live in."

Coming into it the next morning he found the curtains torn down, the carpets taken up, the floor littered with pails, soap and brushes, and Lina in a dismal dress, her hair tied up in a towel, directing two women scrubbing vigorously.

"Good gracious, what are you doing?"

"Cleaning this room."

"Why, Essie had the whole house cleaned till it shone in the fall, and didn't make half the muss," he added, contemptuously.

"Well," said Lina, slowly, "I thought this room a marvel of neatness, myself, but when you remarked it was not fit for the pigs, I supposed that you wanted it cleaned."

"The room was well enough," was the curt reply. "For mercy's sake don't turn any more of the house upside down."

At breakfast a tiny rent in Louie's apron caught her father's eye, and by his own angry statement:

"She never had a decent stitch of clothes, and did wish that somebody would see to her."

Two days later a formidable dry goods bill was presented at the store, and Lina explained in this wise:

"You said, Herbert, that Louie hadn't a decent stitch, and you wished somebody would see to her, so I bought her a complete outfit. I could not see any fault myself, but of course I got more expensive articles, as you did not like those already provided. I am glad you called my attention to the poor neglected child."

"Poor neglected child!" echoed astonished Herbert. "Why, Lina, Essie fairly slaves herself over those children. I am sure I never saw any better dressed or neater."

Lina merely shrugged her shoulders. A month passed. Essie gained strength in the genial atmosphere surrounding Louie and her mother, while Lina ruled Herbert with a rod of iron. Herbert began to experience a sick longing for Essie's gentle presence. Lina took him so very literally in all he said, and yet he could not rebuke her for what he openly wished.

A chair with a tiny spot of dirt being declared absolutely filthy, was upholstered and varnished at a cost of eight dollars. A dozen new shirts, Essie's last labor of love, being said to "set like meal-bags," were bestowed upon the gardener, and a new set sent from a furnishing store. Harry's blocks were burned up in the kitchen fire when Herbert, stepping upon one, said he "would not have such rubbish in the house." Every window was opened after a pettish declaration that the "room was as hot as an oven," and an hour later the stove was fired up to a smothering heat because he declared it "cold enough to freeze a polar bear."

In short, with an apparent attempt to correct all shortcomings, and put the housekeeping upon a perfect basis, Lina in one month nearly doubled her brother's expenses, and drove him to the verge of distraction, keeping actual account of everything.

But Essie, considerably improved in health, was coming home. On the day of her expected arrival, Lina, with a solemn face, invited her brother into the sitting-room for a few minutes' conversation.

"Herbert," she said very gravely, "I have a proposition to make to you. You are my only brother, and I need not tell you I love you dearly. It has really grieved me to the heart to see how much there is to find fault with in your beautiful home."

Herbert twisted uneasily in his chair, but Lina continued:

"You know mother is very dependent upon me, Louie having the house and children to care for; but I think she would sacrifice her own comfort for yours. So, if you wish, Herbert, I will come here permanently, to keep things in order for you."

Here Lina was obliged to stop to strangle a laugh at Herbert's expression of utter horror and dismay.

"You are very kind," he faltered, the instincts of a gentleman battling with a strong desire to tell Lina she would drive him to the lunatic asylum by six months more of her model housekeeping.

"Not at all. A man who has made an unfortunate marriage certainly needs the aid and sympathy his family can give to him."

The last straw was laid upon the camel's back.

Herbert spoke hotly:

"You are entirely mistaken, Lina! I have not made an unfortunate marriage. If ever a man was blessed in a wife, I am that man."

Lina cried in well-feigned amazement:

"You amaze me, Herbert!"

"I do not see why you should be surprised. Essie is gentle, loving, orderly; a model housekeeper, and a perfect home angel—God bless her."

"Herbert, is that true?"

"Certainly it is true."

"I cannot believe it," was the low response.

"Cannot believe it? Why?"

"Because"—and Lina dwelt impressively upon every word—"during the nine years of your married life, though visiting here frequently, I never heard you speak one word of encouragement or praise to Essie. I never saw one look of approbation or appreciation of any effort she made for your comfort upon your face. Continual fault-finding, constant blame have changed her from a happy, winsome girl to a pale, careworn woman. Even her last illness was but the unbroken despair of a heart crushed under a load of daily censure and constant str ving for the approbation never given. And you tell me now that she has never failed in her duty to you. There is a grave error somewhere."

The sadly earnest tone, the face of thoughtful gravity, sent every word home to Herbert Worthing on's heart. He spoke no word of self-defence as Lina slowly left the room.

In the profound silence that followed, conscience reviewed the past, and he knew that his sister had only spoken the truth. The habit of fault-finding, meeting no resistance in Essie's gentleness, had gained in force, till all its monstrosity stood plainly revealed in the experience of the past month.

In all the days when Essie lay dangerously ill, there had been no self-reproach like this in her husband's sorrow. He had given his wife a fair home, an ample income, frequent social pleasures, many costly gifts, while poisoning her whole life.

"God help me," he whispered, "to conquer this fault. Essie shall hear no more fault-finding, and if I see her drooping, I will send her to mother and have Lina come back again."

Never had wife and mother warmer welcome than greeted Essie. The children were unchecked in their loudest demonstrations of delight. But Lina had to rush into the hall to hide her merry tears, when Herbert, kissing Essie, said:

"We must let mother have Lina now, dear. She has been very kind, and worked hard for my comfort; but there is no home fairy like my Essie."

The quick, glad look in his wife's soft eyes told Herbert that he had taken one step in the right direction.

As the days glided by, and Essie found appreciation meeting every effort to add to home comfort, a word of praise for every little triumph of cookery or needle-work, her pale face became bright with untold happiness. Gradually the careworn expression was obliterated by one of content, and Herbert found his own heart lightened by the cheerful voice, the sunny smile, the bright eyes of the Essie he had wooed years before.

And Lina, making a visit six months later, told her mother on her return:

"Herbert has learned his lesson by heart, mother. He appreciates Essie now at her value, and he lets her know it."

CHILDREN'S DRESS.

No child is prettier for an elaborate design of dress. A single ruffle at the edge of the skirt does very well, but it is quite as well without it. And to cut up the tiny space of a child's dress with loopings and trimmings and ornaments seems to us to make them look like monkeys. Not even the sash is beautiful for a child. A child is constructed first of all to eat that it may grow, to receive impressions that it may learn: therefore the head and the stomach are large in proportion to the rest of the body. When the little figure is nude, so that the soft fleshy form can be well seen, all this is beautiful; but to emphasize in the draped form of the child the large stomach by a broad sash, is utterly against all rules of beauty.

The legs and arms are often beautiful, but to show the legs by cutting off the dress at the hips is immensely awkward, and seems chiefly to serve to display the drawers, which are not a beautiful garment, and should be entirely hidden. Besides this, in winter our climate is wholly inappropriate for any such exposure, and we shall best see the beauty of a healthy child in its easy, untrammeled motion as it moves about in a simple dress (of as handsome a material as you like, provided that it is untrimmed), which is long enough to be warm and loose enough to be comfortable. If you want your children to be graceful, let them be unconscious; if you want them to be healthy, let them be sufficiently warm. No woman can have a fine complexion who as a child has been habitually chilled, and we see in the winter many children who seem literally to have nothing on from the waist down. They could much better afford to put it the other way, and wear nothing from the waist up, the lungs and heart being at less expense to warm the upper portion of the body than the legs, which are further away from them.—Miss M. R. Oakey, in Harper's for March.

"MUSIC-POUNDING."

I don't like your chopped music any way. That woman—she had more sense in her little finger than forty medical societies—Florence Nightingale—says that the music you pour out is good for sick folks, and the music you pound out isn't. Not that exactly, but something like it. I have been to hear some music-pounding. It was a young woman, with as many white muslin flounces round her as the planet Saturn has rings, that did it. She gave the music-stool a twirl or two and fluffed down on it like a whirl of soap-suds in a hand-basin. Then she worked her wrists and her hands, to limber 'em, I suppose, and spread out her fingers till they looked as though they would pretty much cover the keyboard, from the growling end to the little squeaky one. Then those two hands of hers made a jump at the keys as if they were a couple of tigers coming down on a flock of black and white sheep, and the piano gave a great howl as if its tail had been trod on. Dead stop—so still you hear your hair growing. Then another jump, and another howl, as if the piano had two tails and you had trod on both of 'em at once, and then a grand clatter and scramble and string of jumps, up and down, back and forward, one hand over the other, like a stampede of rats and mice more than like any thing I call music. I like to hear a woman sing, and I like to hear a fiddle sing, but these noises they hammer out of their wood and ivory anvils—don't talk to me, I know the difference between a bullfrog and a woodthrush. — Oliver W. Holmes.

There is a strange rumbling noise audible upon the Red River, Texas, and as the locality is fifty miles from any railroad it cannot be attributed to passing trains. The inhabitants are much excited over it, believing that it presages volcanic action. It resembles the sound of a railway train, the roar of a distant waterfall, and at night the moaning of the wind through a pine forest. Its range, which is not changeable, is from north to northwest, and it recalls the ominous sounds described by Humboldt as preceding the great earthquake of 1759 in Mexico, when the volcanic mountain of Jorullo was upheaved. Scientific investigation will probably be ordered by the State authorities.

A boastful young fellow having joined, without invitation, a party of friends dining at a restaurant, and having indulged in his usual amount of brag, one of the party said to him: "You have told us enough of what you can do; now tell us something that you can't do." "Faith," answered he, "that's easy enough; I can't pay my share of the bill."

A husband telegraphed to his wife: "What have you for breakfast, and how is the baby?" The answer came: "Buckwheat cakes and the measles."

He Who Has Money, and He Who Has None.

Oh! 'Tis all one to me, all one,
Whether I've money or whether I've none!
He who has money can buy him a wife,
And he who has none can be free for life.
He who has money can trade if he choose,
And he who has none has nothing to lose.
He who has money can squint at the fair,
And he who has none escapes from much care.
He who has money has cares not a few,
And he who has none can sleep the night through.
He who has money can go to the play,
And he who has none at home can stay.
He who has money can travel about,
He who has none can go without.
He who has money can be coarse as he will,
And he who has none can be coarser still.
He who has money can buy oyster meat,
And he who has none the shell can eat.
He who has money can drink foreign wine,
And he who has none with the gout will not pine.
He who has money the cash must pay,
And he who has none says, "Charge it, pray."
He who has money keeps a dog if he please,
And he who has none is not troubled with fleas.
He who has money must die some day,
And he who has none must go the same way.
Ah! 'Tis all one to me, all one,
Whether I've money or whether I've none.

WINTER EVENINGS AT HOME.

Let us be careful, during these winter months, that the social gatherings, societies, meetings, clubs, etc., which so multiply at this time and claim attention, do not overshadow more important domestic duties or interfere with our family relations. It undoubtedly "does us good" to get out of our "ruts," to get out among other people, to hear their opinions, and see their way of doing things. It helps us also to do society work, to understand and be governed by parliamentary rules. It disciplines us, and teaches us business-like methods; but we must not become so engrossed in such pursuits or pleasures as to weaken our interest in the home. No family can afford to give up their own gathering about their own fireside. No matter how good the objects are which call us so constantly into fields of labor outside of the domestic circle, we shall in no wise be absolved from our individual responsibilities towards those under our own roof. There should be at least one evening in the week when the entire family will remain at home—an evening to talk over family matters, affording an opportunity for parents and children, brothers and sisters, to keep up their interest in and acquaintance with each other. The value of such a custom would be incalculable in cementing affection and in increasing mutual respect and appreciation. During these evenings, the utmost freedom and sociability should exist; the parents and elder children meanwhile endeavoring to lead the conversation, and to interest the whole in some inproving subject. Everything should be done to make them pleasant and profitable. Games, plays, music, reading aloud, discussions, studies of artists and authors and their works, tricks, scientific experiments, etc., might all be woven into the programme without being in the least irksome, though, with the exercise of a little tact, the peculiar gifts and ability of each member of the family might be brought out and made useful for the entertainment of the whole and for the encouragement and appreciation of home talent. Cherish the love of home, and let nothing cheat you out of its pleasures and comforts.—Christian Intelligencer.

A POOR PIECE OF LEGISLATION.

So far as the Legislature is concerned the amendment to the State Constitution by which the disfranchisement of certain soldiers and sailors is to be prevented, has been adopted. The question goes now to the people, who will vote upon it at the next election. This amendment introduces a new and wrong principle into the administration of affairs. It has gone through two successive Legislatures rather against the deliberate sense of a majority, mainly because "a negative vote might be misconstrued," and because the amendment probably "would not do any harm," to quote what a great many members have been free to say in private. If it has any perceptible effect, it will create a most unjust distinction between poor soldiers who cannot afford to pay a tax, but who are willing to exert themselves to avoid receiving aid from the poor department of a town, and those who, (perhaps from shiftlessness or bad habits) apply to a town for aid. The first (and most worthy class it may be) cannot vote without paying a tax. The second (and least worthy it may be) may vote without paying a tax simply because they get aid from the town. If the amendment, in practice, does "not amount to anything," and is to have no real effect, then it is too trivial a matter to put into the constitution. For a State to introduce into its fundamental law a provision that its soldier paupers may vote without even the payment of the tax to which other people are subjected, when that State is paying $400,000 annually to prevent the possibility of soldiers becoming paupers, is to run a sentiment pretty badly into the ground, and looks a good deal like courting the favor of "the soldier class" with chaff.—Salem Gazette.

ENCOURAGE YOUR CHILDREN.

Parents are too often slow to see the motive of their children's kindest actions. A little fellow has been reading of some young hero who helped his father and mother in all sorts of ways; and after racking his brain to think how he too can help, he remembers that he can fetch his father's slippers, and take his boots away and put them in the proper place. Without saying a word to anybody, when evening comes he does it; but the father is so occupied that he notices not what the boy has done. The little fellow hopes on, thinking that when he goes to bed, his father will say how pleased he was to see Charley so willing to help; but not a word is uttered; and the boy goes up to bed with a choking feeling in his throat, and says his prayer by the bedside, with a sadness very real in his heart. Parents often complain of children not being so ready to help as they should be; the fault is with the parents, who have not known how to evoke feelings with which the heart of every child is richly stored. All words of approval are helpful and encouraging. In a large family there have been days of anxiety and care. The eldest daughter by her skill in teaching has earned a little extra money, and without a word to anyone she lays nearly all of it out in buying things that are much needed in the house. What joys fill her heart when a fond mother takes her aside, and with emotion that cannot be concealed, says how thankful she is for such considerate kindness, and murmurs: "I don't know what we should do without you, darling." My friend, do not be so chary of these words of encouragement.

A MODERN MIRACLE.

For several years the writer has had the opportunity from time to time of receiving bottles containing the water of Lourdes. One of these, holding about four ounces, was given to him by one of his patients, an estimable Roman Catholic priest, who obtained it at Lourdes; and this, as being the most authentic, was the one employed in the case now to be described. A woman of about thirty years had for over eight months suffered from a very distressing spasmodic affection of certain muscles of the neck, by which her head was stongly rotated to one side, so that she was constantly in the position of one trying to look over the shoulder. Not only was the position uncomfortable, but it was attended with considerable pain, and she was therefore kept in a continued excited and "nervous" condition. When the writer saw her she had already been treated with those means which are most efficacious in the disease in question, and he was consulted mainly for the purpose of getting his opinion in relation to the propriety of relieving the contraction by a surgical operation, and, if deemed advisable, of performing it. One morning the patient, who was a devout Roman Catholic, expressed her great regret at being unable to go to Lourdes, or to obtain any of the water from the grotto, for she was firmly convinced that if she could be subjected to the influence of this holy liquid, her cure would be at once effected. Being at the time engaged in some experiments relative to the influence of magnets, the efficacy of which was supposed, and perhaps properly, to be entirely due to expectant attention, or faith, the writer determined to see how far supreme faith would go in producing a cure in a case such as that before him. He accordingly informed the patient that he had some of the water of Lourdes, and another water which had produced marvelous results, and which in his opinion was preferable to the other. This last was call Aqua Crotonis. Both were at her service; but she was strongly advised to try the Aqua Crotonis instead of the water of Lourdes. She evinced the utmost joy and eagerness, exclaiming that now her restoration was assured, and that she would not submit to an operation. She begged hard for the Lourdes water, but the writer insisted that for two days she should try the Aqua Crotonis; and that then, if this was ineffectual, she should have the water of Lourdes. After many entreaties to be allowed to begin with the Lourdes water, she consented to try the Aqua Crotonis first. The writer then went into an adjoining room, took some of the genuine Lourdes water, poured it into another vial, labelled it Aqua Crotonis, and gave it to her. She at once applied some of it, as she was directed to do, to the affected muscle, though as she said, without the least hope or expectation that it would do her the slightest good. She went away still begging for the Lourdes water, not suspecting that she had two ounces of the genuine article in her pocket.

According to appointment she returned. She had rubbed the part several times each day with the water I had given her, but the result, so far from being favorable, was directly the reverse,—as was very evident not only from her own account, but from the appearance of the neck and head. For, instead of having had hope to aid her, she had been the victim of despondency, and her expectant attention, so far from having been on the side of a cure, had been diverted into the opposite direction. "She knew the Aqua Crotonis would not be effectual." Of course, the result had been exactly as the writer had anticipated, the water of Lourdes having been shown to possess no healing virtue aside from that derived from expectant attention,—a quality which it shares with bread pills, colored water, metallic tractions, etc., when faith is put in them. He determined, however, to perform upon this patient the converse experiment of giving her Croton water, and leaving her under the strong conviction that she was now receiving the water which, at the command of the Blessed Virgin, had flowed from the grotto at Lourdes. He accordingly placed an ounce of water drawn from the tap, in a vial, and labeled it "Water of Lourdes, Feast of the Annunciation, 1879," and with apparent reluctance to part with even so small a quantity of so precious a liquid, gave it to her. She received it with most profuse thanks, and left the house announcing her intention to use it as soon as she reached her home. It was then about eleven o'clock in the morning. At half-past one she rushed into the consulting room exclaiming, "I am cured! I am cured! See what the Holy Virgin has done for me!" And she was cured. The contracted muscles were relaxed, and she could turn her head as well in one direction as another. The Croton water, as the medium of her expectant attention, had effected what seemed to her a miracle.—Dr. A. Hammond in International Review.

The coffee-houses established in the great English cities, as a means of keeping men away from taverns, have been as great a success in a pecuniary as they have been in a moral point of view. Most of the companies pay an annual dividend of 10 per cent, on their capital. The coffee-houses supply coffee, tea and cocoa, soups, cold meats and bread and butter—all the articles being of good quality and the prices low. Newspapers are kept in abundance, and the customers are free to remain and read as long as they please. Why should not the same means for humanizing men be equally successful in this country?

A straightforward boy returning from school at the end of the week handed to his father his weekly report. "So, my son, you stand number twenty-seven in your class. How many does the class contain?" "Twenty-seven, sir," was the boy's reply, and the father admired his frankness. The following week the report placed the lad number twenty-nine. "How is this?" the father inquired; "I thought there were only twenty-seven in the class." "Ah, sir, two new boys came in this week."

"Most unfortunate!"—Bailie McScrew (to Smith, who is on a short visit to the North): "An' what are ye daen' to-morrow nicht, Mester Smeth?" Smith: "To-morrow? Oh, nothing particular; I've no engagement." Bailie: "An' the next nicht?" Smith: "Ah! on Friday I've promised to dine with the Browns——" Bailie: "Man, that's a petty! Aw was gaun' t' ausk ye to tak' yer dinner wi' us o' Friday!"

Peddler: "'Mornin', Mr. Waggles. Hinjoyin' yer mornin' pipe hafter last night's storm? I heard you and your wife havin' high words as I passed at 12 o'clock." Mr. Waggles (a reprobate)—"High words, wos it?—more like low langwidge, I calls it."

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 26, 1881.

Gov. Long's Fast Day proclamation is out, naming Thursday, April 7, as the day.

Senator Conkling is very "serene" since his return from Mentor, it is said. Did anybody suppose he would be anything else? That does not signify anything.

The Senatorial dead-lock in the Pennsylvania Legislature was brought to an end Wednesday, by the election of Congressman John I. Mitchell, upon whom both factions of the Republicans had agreed the evening before.

Senator Matthew H. Carpenter, of Wisconsin, a man of brilliant mental abilities, died at Washington Thursday, from Bright's disease, at the age of 57 years. He expressed a desire that his remains should be cremated.

The State Senate on Thursday passed the local option bill, requiring cities and towns to vote on the question of granting liquor licenses, and Gov. Long will doubtless approve it. There are some doubts whether the measure will be of any practical advantage to the cause of temperance.

The restored battle flags of the 27th regiment were welcomed back by some 250 members of the old regiment at Springfield Tuesday, with appropriate ceremonies and a good deal of enthusiasm, and after the public exercises the banners were deposited in the city library, where they will remain in the future.

Gen. Garfield will start for Washington next Monday with his family, to be in readiness for his inauguration on Friday, and it will now soon be known what persons are to constitute his cabinet. There has been a great deal of tall guessing on the subject, but Gen. Garfield has kept his own counsel, and it has been purely guess-work, though doubtless some of the names mentioned will appear in the list of nominations.

Some of the national banks at New York, and a few in other parts of the country, have taken prompt measures to retire a part or the whole of their circulation, on account of the passage of the 3 per cent funding bill. Most of the banks, however, will wait for a little more light on its probable effect, before giving up their circulation. There is a pretty general feeling that a 3 per cent bond cannot be floated at par, but if the tax on deposits is removed, as an inducement to the banks to take them, they will have a pretty good send-off.

Albert D. Briggs of Springfield, a leading and most highly respected citizen of this part of the State, an able, upright and sagacious business man, and a genial, whole-souled gentleman, died on Sunday morning, at the age of 61 years. Mr. Briggs was a civil engineer by profession, and was for many years engaged in bridge building. He was mayor of Springfield in 1865–7, and had held several other local offices. He was appointed railroad commissioner in 1870, and held the position until the time of his death, bringing to it a wide and valuable mechanical knowledge and skill, which made him one of the most valuable members of the board.

France has forbidden the importation of American pork into that country, on account of the prevalence of trichiniasis. Russia, Italy, Austria, Spain, Portugal and Greece have also issued similar orders. The British government, however, has decided not to prohibit its importation at present, as there is no evidence that it is diseased to a greater extent than any other imported pork. The amount of pork annually imported into that country from the United States, Canada, Germany and Denmark is more than twenty pounds per head for every inhabitant of the United Kingdom.

The selectmen of Brockton refused in 1880 to issue licenses to sell liquor, and took the business into their own hands. The profits of the business, it is estimated, will amount to about $7000 per year, which will be turned over to the town treasurer.

H. H. Hadley, who was accused of writing the Morey Chinese letter, offers a reward of from five to twenty-five thousand dollars to discover the real culprit provided he be promised immunity from punishment.

It is estimated that the losses entailed upon the principal western railroads, by the recent snow blockades, will more than equal the net earnings of these lines for January and February.

A sudden flood in the Raritan River did considerable damage last Saturday, sweeping away bridges and other property in New Jersey.

Rev. Dr. Adams of Holyoke, who was expected to preach at the Baptist church Wednesday evening, was not able to reach here in season for the service, on account of the lateness of the 7.05 p. m. train from the west, which came in about 9 o'clock, with the New York express. The arrangement by which the Hampden county stockholders of the Boston & Albany Railroad have received their dividends at the Chapin National Bank in Springfield for a few years past, has proved so acceptable that the stockholders in Berkshire, Worcester and Bristol counties are to be similarly accommodated hereafter. C. W. Eddy of Ware entertained a small party of our citizens in a very pleasant and instructive manner in this place Monday evening, with an exhibition of the marvelous works and beauties of nature, as revealed by the microscope. He had two fine instruments, and a large variety of choice objects. Mr. Eddy has taken up microscopy as a recreation, and in looking out the minute things of nature he has found it a study of absorbing interest, which has aroused a spirit of enthusiasm within him, which he imparts to others in great measure, as he displays and explains the numerous objects he has gathered and mounted so skillfully.

James Whitman, an old and respected citizen of this place, died suddenly on Thursday evening of apoplexy. He went to Belchertown in the morning to see a sister, feeling usually well, but during the forenoon was taken with a severe pain in his side and chest. This mostly passed away in the afternoon, and when he started for home on the evening train he felt quite smart, and walked from the depot to the post office in this place, where he stepped into a sleigh to ride home. He talked naturally until he had passed the "point of rocks," when he ceased, and passed away almost immediately, breathing but two or three times after being taken into the house.

The Boston & Albany Railroad began this week selling tickets to Montreal, from Boston and Springfield, by the way of Albany, for $2, a rate which would be apt to draw out a crowd of excursionists if it were summer instead of winter. Of this sum the Grand Trunk road gets $1.90 for the distance between Rouse's Point and Montreal, and the tolls across the Hudson river absorb the balance, so that the Boston & Albany and the Delaware & Hudson companies are not likely to get very rich out of the transaction. It is understood that the cut is made to pay off the Vermont Central line for selling tickets from Boston to Chicago for $2 less than is done by the Boston & Albany road.

Mr. Harley Newcomb of Boston will visit Palmer on Monday next, and in the afternoon, from 4 to 5 o'clock, will receive the school children at Wales Hall. All interested in forming an adult class for ladies and gentlemen will meet at 8 o'clock. Considerable interest has been created in this singing matter and our citizens ought not to let this opportunity for improvement pass unheeded. It is hoped that Mr. Newcomb will see such numbers in attendance as will guarantee his completing arrangements for his work among us. Let no one stay away, who desires to see the science of music advanced. The evening class will be for beginners as well as advanced singers. The system of instruction will be practical and comprehensive, and includes physical training.

Editor Palmer Journal: — In your issue of Feb. 19th this article appeared:

The water in Marchant & Brigham's boiler got so low Monday that the employes ran from the building, fearing a blow-up, but the danger was passed over without anything more serious than the fright.

I am certain had you taken the trouble to investigate (instead of taking street rumor) you would not have published the above, as it conveys information very far from the facts in the case, and reflects on our engineer in that he allowed the water to get low in our boiler, when the fact was there was as much water as ever in it. The trouble was there was an obstruction in the pipe connecting the boiler and gauges, which was easily removed. As a careful user of steam, when he reported to me that he did not know where the water was in the boiler (as his gauge and cocks showed no water), and before investigating, I ordered him to draw his fire at once, and also ordered all the help in the upper part of the building sent to the office. No one left the building to my knowledge. Had I not taken the precaution that I did, no one would have known anything of the affair until it was all over, for in less time than it will take you to read this letter the gauges showed 2½ good gauges of water, and all the help were at work again. In justice to all, I ask you to give this letter as prominent a position in your next issue as you did the article referred to, and oblige, Yours respectfully,

George W. Marchant.

One little fellow last Sunday got to amusing himself with the singing book, and was told to put it aside and listen to the minister, but looking up very innocently he said, "I don't enjoy that preaching."

INDIAN ORCHARD.

J. E. Stone, who appeared in a combination club act in the home talent minstrel show, has greatly improved since his last appearance, and can now perform some extremely difficult feats with grace and seeming ease.

The young people's lyceum held its meeting Wednesday evening instead of Tuesday this week. The question for discussion was, "Ought suffrage to be extended to women?" with W. B. Morse and Rev. F. M. Sprague affirmative, and Lawyer L. L. Wood and H. L. Hines negative. The decision was given to the latter.

The Irish Land League had a mass meeting in Wight's Hall last Friday night. The president, J. H. Maloney, introduced as presiding officer of the evening Rev. John Kenny, who addressed the meeting at length, and was followed by P. J. Ryan of Springfield, and he in turn by Rev. M. E. Barry of Northampton, who made a very eloquent address. The proceeds will be about $35.

L. B. Richardson put his home minstrel talent before over a $100 house in Wight's Hall last Tuesday night, and carried out his rousing programme to the letter, with the exception of the solos by A. H. Halford, who had not returned from his wedding journey, and his absence caused the other three of the "Columbia Quartette," Messrs. Packard, Emory and Lane, to sing the selections as trios. Mr. Lane's singing of "He's coming back again, little girl," was very fine. Some fearful local hits were given, and the "Coonville Quartette" was immense, with Len. and his razor to lead. As interlocutor Fred Lane showed himself an adept. The show will probably be presented in other places soon.

WARE AND VICINITY.

Mercury below zero again Thursday morning.

The Western corner on pork has begun to effect Ware markets, and all kind of pork are now higher than a few weeks since.

The annual meeting of the Young Men's Library Association will be held at their rooms next week Thursday evening.

L. B. Sibley, who was formerly one of our enterprising Ware boys, gave us a call the past week. He is now wholesale buyer and shipper of butter at Dexter, Iowa.

The ladies of the Woman's Missionary Society connected with the Methodist church are to hold an entertainment and tea party at their church and vestry next Wednesday evening.

Ware Center is still trying to keep up with the times, and for speedy communication a telephone has been put up between the residence of W. L. Brakenridge and Jonah W. Cummings.

The grammar school closes next Friday, the examination of classes being in the forenoon, and the rhetorical exercises in the afternoon. All are most cordially invited by the principal to be present.

Rev. C. L. Woodworth, agent of the American Missionary Association, preached at the East Congregational church last Sunday, presenting the claims of this association on the benevolence of our people.

Isaac Donalson was arrested on Tuesday by Deputy Sheriff C. S. Robinson for drunkenness, and abuse of his mother and sister. The matter was settled, however, by his paying costs and promising to do better.

Town meeting is not many weeks hence. Are any slates made up? We suppose there will be two tickets in the field, the same as last year, one in favor of license, or the present management, and the other against license.

The pool of water in front of the Hampshire House and on the cross walk during those stormy days the past week has not been pleasant to pedestrians, and some arrangement ought to be made to prevent its recurrence.

At the dramatic entertainment of the reform club at Gilbertville last Saturday evening they cleared about $13, but at Ware Wednesday and Thursday evenings they barely paid expenses. They deserved much better success, as their parts were all well taken.

The concert by the Temple Quartette Tuesday evening was listened to by a full house, all of whom were well pleased. This closes the entertainment course by the Y. M. L. A. The association has given our people an opportunity to attend entertainments of the very best class, and we can assure them that this has been appreciated.

The last quarterly meeting of the Methodist society resulted in the choice of these officers: Stewards, J. P. Crowell, George E. Puffer, D. C. Gates, H. Ramsdell, J. T. Winslow, F. S. Gates, J. W. Cummings, C. H. Ormsby and O. C. Stetson; Trustees, Benjamin Davis, J. P. Crowell, George E. Puffer, H. Ramsdell, John Grant, H. H. Hart, George Eddy, Joshua Lewis and H. C. Davis. It was voted to ask the return of Rev. A. J. Hall for the coming year.

L. C. Robinson of Three Rivers has been in town the past week, working for the organization of a subordinate chapter of the Golden Rule Alliance, and has succeeded so well that it may be safe to say that a chapter will be organized. The object of the organization is a sort of life insurance, combined with social meetings. The membership being composed entirely of members of evangelical churches, it is claimed that it costs less to insure in this way than any other.

The committee of the Ware Musical Society have arranged to give a concert on Fast Day evening. Rehearsals are held every Monday evening. Selections from the choral works of Handel, Mendelssohn, Gounod and others are in preparation. To make this concert a popular and paying one, as it ought to be from the amount of work the director is doing to make it a success, the committee must remember that the public want something besides the music of the great authors.

The following are some of the books added to the library this week: "New way around the World," Carleton; Lives of Jas. A. Garfield; "Sir William Herschel and Haroun Abraschid;" "History of Christian Church," Blackburn; "English Literature," Abby S. Richardson; "Browsing among Books," A. G. Woolson; "Curious Myths of Middle Ages," S. B. Gould; "Woodward's Country Homes;" "The Sugar Beet," L. S. Ware; "Open Fireplace," J. P. Putnam; "Modern Society," Julia Ward Howe; "Mashallab," C. W. Stoddard.

REV. DR. PERKINS'S SILVER WEDDING.

The celebration of the 25th anniversary of the settlement of Rev. A. E. P. Perkins, D. D., in Ware, drew together a large number of people from all parts of the town, and from neighboring towns as well, including nearly all the clergymen of the Brookfield Associational Conference, and several others. At the meeting in the church at 3 p. m. a large congregation was assembled. The same motto, "O Lord, hear the prayer of thy servant and cause thy face to shine upon thy Sanctuary," in immortelle flowers upon a groundwork of evergreen, which was placed there for the Sabbath when the 25th anniversary sermon was preached, remained in place, while in the rear of the church in front of the gallery, in brilliant colored immortelles surrounded by a delicate arrangement of fern, appeared the words, "Remember them who have spoken unto you the words of God, and esteem them very highly in love for their work's sake." The pulpit and surroundings were decorated in a very tasty manner with flowers and evergreens, and from the gas burners on either side trailed a chain of choice flowers down the buttresses nearly to the floor.

The exercises were opened by a voluntary, "The messengers who bring the Gospel of Peace," by a select choir comprising the best musical talent of the town, under the direction of Geo. G. Hall, which was followed by the reading of the 103d, 133d and 134th Psalms, and prayer by Rev. W. S. Tuttle of Ware Center. After singing of the hymn, "How beauteous are their feet, who stand on Zion's hill," Hon. William Hyde, chairman of the day, made a few introductory remarks, alluding to the rare event of any pastor remaining so long in one pastorate. Rev. M. L. Richardson of Sturbridge then spoke of Dr. Perkins's connection with the Brookfield Associational Conference, saying he believed we had come here, "not for empty compliments, but to state facts," and in speaking of the Doctor's scholarly attainments said that "all questions which ever came up for discussion before the association were always referred to Dr. Perkins, with the assurance that he was so well posted that his decisions were final." He said there seemed to be a feeling in the association that the Doctor was mentally superior, not only to any one of them, but to all of them combined. He also spoke of the universal kindness of his criticisms, making those whom he criticised most severely, feel that he was their friend and sympathizer. After a few remarks by Rev. E. P. Blodgett of Greenwich, who has remained in his present pastorate longer than any other clergyman in this vicinity, and singing of the anthem, by the choir, "I waited for the Lord," short addresses appropriate to the occasion, referring to the high estimate which is placed upon the life and work of Dr. Perkins in all this section of country, were given by the following clergymen: E. C. Ewing of Enfield, B. M. Fullerton of Palmer, W. S. Tuttle of Ware Center, E. S. Gould of West Brookfield, A. H. Somes of West Warren, J. T. Gaylord of Barre and D. R. Adkins of Brimfield. During these remarks it was shown that when the petition was first made to establish the town of Ware it was not granted, because the people of this locality were too poor to support the institutions of a town, but, "as they lived a weary way from worship," (Palmer being the nearest,) the people were allowed to form a community called the "Ware River Precinct," from which the First church at Ware Center came into existence. Thus the church at Palmer was shown to be the grandmother, and that at Ware Center the mother of the present East Congregational church. The exercises closed with the anthem "Praise the Lord," and benediction by Rev. A. J. Hall, of the Methodist church.

In the evening a large and brilliant party of nearly 500 assembled at Music Hall, which was beautifully and appropriately decorated with evergreen for the occasion, to celebrate the 25th wedding anniversary of Dr. & Mrs. Perkins. The time until eight o'clock was spent in a most cordially social manner, when the party were called to order and the exercises of the evening commenced by a finely rendered duett upon the piano by Messrs. Geo. E. Hall and E. N. Anderson. A bountiful collation was then served, after which there was singing by Messrs. H. B. & E. N. Anderson and Mr. Hall, "In the land far away." An exercise was then given by nearly 40 children, introduced by a recitation, "We are all here," by Miss Lucy Hyde, followed by the representatives of the children bringing flowers to the bride and bridegroom, and closing by a recitation addressed to them by Miss Belle Hyde, with a response by the children and the presentation by them of a beautiful silver fruit dish, lined with gold. Dr. Perkins said in reply that no event of the day, and none of the evening, would be likely to give him more pleasure, or be longer remembered by him, than this exercise by the children; that he was not much of a hand to make speeches to the children, but he could make them feel that he loved them and felt a deep interest in their welfare. Hon. Wm. Hyde then presented the bridal loaf from the ladies, and three dozen silver knives and two bouquets from California, that land of flowers, accompanied by the reading of an interesting letter from the donors, Mr. and Mrs. Mills. The young men of the congregation, nearly 50 in number, presented the Doctor with a fine French clock for his study, Mr. Hyde remarking that it might be a hint for him not to make his sermons too long. A china service of 152 pieces, valued at $150, was given by the men of the society. There were also many useful and valuable presents from individuals.

Dr. Perkins responded heartily, thanking all for their universal kindness to him, and said that from his experience in the past he had learned to expect nothing but kindness. There were many tearful eyes as he paid a tender tribute to his wife, and alluded to the great help she had been to him in all his work here. Remarks were then made by Rev. C. L. Woodworth, brother-in-law of Dr. Perkins, who felt thankful that he belonged to the Perkins family. He related several incidents of the Doctor's early life, and paid a high tribute to Mrs. Perkins, which was received with earnest applause. Mr. Hyde then spoke of some of the prophecies of pastors in this vicinity, when Dr. Perkins was settled here, as to the length of time he would remain, setting it from 10 to 20 years, but he had done better. He had remained 25 years, and he hoped he might remain 25 years more; and judging by the immense applause, this was the wish of every one of the large party present. "The vale where my home lies" was then sung in an effective manner by Messrs. Andersons and Mr. Hall, the exercises closing with the playing of the wedding march by Mrs. Bond, Mrs. Tarbell and Miss Hattie Richardson.

MISHAPS AND MISDEEDS.

There was a shocking casualty at East Liverpool, Ohio, at an early hour Wednesday morning, occasioned by the burning of a building, the upper story of which was occupied by Wm. Sloan and his family. Mr. Iloan was awakened by the fire, and taking his 3-years-old daughter he started for the stairs, but found them in flames. He then jumped from the window, calling to his wife to do likewise, but it is supposed she was overcome by the smoke, for she did not follow, but perished in the flames, with six of her children and a brother-in-law.

When All the World is Young.

When all the world is young, lad,
And all the trees are green,
And every goose a swan, lad,
And every lass a queen,
Then hey for boot and horse, lad,
And round the world away,
Young blood must have its course, lad,
And every dog his day.

When all the world is old, lad,
And all the trees are brown,
And all the sports are stale, lad,
And all the wheels run down,
Creep home, and take your place there,
The spent and maimed among;
God grant you find one face there,
You loved when you was young.

A GREAT MONOPOLY.

Very few of the forty millions of people in the United States who burn kerosene know that its production, manufacture, and export, its price at home and abroad, have been controlled for years by a single corporation,—the Standard Oil Company. This company began in a partnership, in the early years of the civil war, between Samuel Andrews and John Rockefeller in Cleveland. Rockefeller had been a bookkeeper in some interiort own in Ohio, and had afterwards made a few thousand dollars by keeping a flour store in Cleveland. Andrews had been a day laborer in refineries, and so poor that his wife took in sewing. He found a way of refining by which more kerosene could be got out of a barrel of petroleum than by any other method, and set up for himself a ten-barrel still in Cleveland, by which he cleared $500 in six months. Andrews' still and Rockefeller's savings have grown into the Standard Oil Company. It has a capital, nominally $3,500,000, but really much more, on which it divides among its stockholders every year millions of dollars of profits. It has refineries at Cleveland, Baltimore, and New York. Its own acid works, glue factories, hardware stores, and barrel shops supply it with all the accessories it needs in its business. It has bought land at Indianapolis on which to erect the largest barrel factory in the country. It has drawn its check for $1,000,000 to suppress a rival. It buys 30,000 to 40,000 barrels of crude oil a day, at a price fixed by itself, and makes special contracts with the railroads for the transportation of 13,000,000 to 14,000,000 barrels of oil a year. The four quarters of the globe are partitioned among the members of the Standard combinations. One has the control of the China trade; another that of some country of Europe; another that of the United States. In New York, you cannot buy oil for East Indian export from the house that has been given the European trade; reciprocally, the East Indian house is not allowed to sell for export to Europe. The Standard produces only one fiftieth or sixtieth of our petroleum, but dictates the price of all, and refines nine tenths. Circulars are issued at intervals by which the price of oil is fixed for all the cities of the country, except New York, where a little competition survives. Such is the indifference of the Standard Oil Company to railroad charges that the price is made the same for points so far apart as Terre Haute, Chicago, and Keokuk. There is not to-day a merchant in Chicago, or in any other city in the New England, Western, and Southern States, dealing in kerosene, whose prices are not fixed for him by the Standard. In all cases these prices are graded so that a merchant in one city cannot export to another. Chicago, Cincinnati, or Cleveland is not allowed to supply the tributary towns. That is done by the Standard itself, which runs oil in its own tank cars to all the principal points of distribution. This corporation has driven into bankruptcy, or out of business, or into union with itself, all the petroleum refiners of the country except five in New York, and a few of little consequence in Western Pennsylvania. Nobody knows how many millions Rockefeller is worth. Current gossip among his business acquaintance in Cleveland puts his income last year at a figure second only, if second at all, to that of Vanderbilt. His partner, Samuel Andrews, the poor English day laborer, retired years ago with millions. Just who the Standard Oil Company are, exactly what their capital is, and what are their relations to the railroads, nobody knows except in part. Their officers refused to testify before the supreme court of Pennsylvania, the late New York Railroad Investigating Committee, and a committee of Congress. The New York committee found there was nothing to be learned from them, and was compelled to confess its inability to ascertain as much as it desired to know "of this mysterious organization, whose business and transactions are of such a character that its members declined giving a history or description, lest their testimony be used to convict them of crime."—D. H. Lloyd, in March Atlantic.

Many people regard religion as they regard small pox; they desire to have it as light as possible, and are very careful that it does not mark them.

WHAT MADE THE MULE GO.

A gaunt and wicked-looking mule, owned by a countryman, balked the other day, and the usual crowd gathered to offer advice and suggest plans for moving the animal. Various expedients were tried, such as twisting his tail and putting dirt into his eyes, ears, and mouth; but he retained his composure and refused to notice the treatment of the operator even with a kick. They were about to build a fire under him when a saloon keeper in the neighborhood offered to bet $5 that he could make him "get," and there being no takers, concluded to do it just for the sake of showing his knowledge of mules. He took from his pocket a flask of "tangle-foot" and poured a little into the passive mule's mouth. In a second afterwards there was blank astonishment in every feature of that animal's countenance, and the next instant he humped himself and shot down the street as if with the intent of eclipsing St. Julien's record. The owner watched him for a moment, and then turning to the bottle-holder, said: "Mister, if that ere stuff ain't too pizen strong I'll take a drop of it in my mouth, for I've got to catch that mule."

"Gem'len," said the old man, as he got his legs under him, "a pusson who labors under de ideah dat he am foolin' de world, will sooner or later git de grand laff. A pusson can deceive the public for a few days, or a few weeks, but as soon as de fraud am exposed he am a gone coon. You may stand yer hats ober on yer ears, hang out yer brass watch chains an' puff away at yer cheap cigars, but the majority of men will see right frew you like a buzz saw choppin' up cheese. "Mr. O'Rafferty," said the Galveston Recorder, "the witnesses all say you kicked this gentleman and called him all manner of vile names." "I don't know what happened, your Honor. It's only wid me own family that I take such liberties, and if I have been tratin' such an ill-favored scoundrel aa if he was a member of me own family I'll regret it to the last day of me life, I will."—Galveston News.

About eight o'clock, says the Rochester Democrat, an inebriated man was observed holding himself up by means of a lamp post on a prominent street. This lamp post had on it a small box, and the man had apparently stood there for some time. A reporter had occasion to pass the man, and remarked, "Hello, there; what's the matter?" "Well," said the man, "I—hic—put five cents in the box here half an hour ago, and this car ain't started yet."

A French chemist is reported to have given a striking proof of domestic affection. He condensed the body of his deceased wife into the space of an ordinary seal, and had her highly polished and set in a ring. He made a nice income by betting with lapidaries and others that they could not tell the material of the seal in three guesses, and, after pocketing the money, would burst into tears and say, "It is my dear, dear wife."

Does a man ever go into a grocery store and say, "I will give you five cents a lb. for sugar," and expect to be treated with respect? Not at all. He asks the price of sugar, and pays what is asked or goes without. But the same man will offer a price 20 cents below the rates for a given space of a newspaper, and feel offended because it is not taken.—New Haven Register.

More than 800,000 acres of land have been reclaimed from the water in Holland since the beginning of the sixteenth century, and the work still goes on at the rate of about eight acres per day. Since 1850, the Lake of Haarlem has been drained, and now the Zuyder Zee is to be pumped out, which will surpass all previous endeavors.

Messrs. Whitman & Furrell of Little Falls, N. Y., who have tested ensilage upon a large scale, are convinced that 400 tons of ensilage, obtained from 16 acres of rich land, is equal to 150 tons of good hay, obtained from four or five times as many acres.

I am confident I should have lost both of them one night if I had not had the Hop Bitters in my house to use. I found they did them so much good I continued wi h them, and they are now well—That is why I say you do not know half the value of Hop Bitters, and do not recommend them highly enough."—B., Rochester, N. RUPTURE.

Wesley Phillips' Case.

DR. J. A. SHERMAN—Dear Sir: I am happy to inform you that I am entirely cured of my large scrotal rupture. It is one year ago to-day that I received your treatment. I have tested the cure by going without the appliance. My business is that of a locomotive engineer. My rupture, as you will recall to your mind, was similar to Mr. Jordan's, in your pamphlet of illustrations.

I was ruptured in the year 1863, while in the army. I have tried spring and elastic trusses with great discomfort and injury, my rupture always growing worse. Finding I must get some relief or give up my business, I determined to try you as a last resort, and I must say that I found your treatment a complete success. My improvement and cure have, considering my terrible condition, surprised my friends as well as myself. During your treatment I have worked hard in my business, enjoying both safety and comfort, and have not lost a day's work. My general health has also improved. I will take pleasure in recommending the afflicted to you whenever I have an opportunity.

You may publish this letter for the benefit of humanity. My address is 211 East 44th St. With best wishes I remain yours respectfully,
WESLEY PHILLIPS.

New York City, Oct. 25, 1880.

Its Relief and Cure as Certain as Day follows Day.

Since the reduction of Dr. Sherman's terms, thousands are crowding upon him for treatment, gladly throwing away their chafing, irksome, dispiriting, and life-punishing trusses. His treatment for this affliction makes the patient comfortable and safe in the performance of every kind of exercise or labor. It is a grand thing, and those who are ruptured and do not provide themselves with it must endure the dangers of that precarious affliction and the use of trusses all through life. Thousands of those cured give the most flattering testimonials to Dr. Sherman. He is the author and inventor of his popular system; he imparts his secret to no one; it is applicable to all classes and cases, and, under his reduced rate, within the reach of every one.

I HAVE taken the agency of H. Clausen & Sons' New York Lager. J. P. MURPHY, 73 and 75 Main Street, Palmer, Mass.

"Yes."

They stood above the world,
In a world apart,
And she dropped her happy eyes,
And stilled the throbbing pulses
Of her happy heart.
And the moonlight fell above her,
Her secret to discover,
And the moonbeams kissed her hair,
As though no human lover
Had laid his kisses there.

"Look up, brown eyes," he said,
"And answer mine;
Lift up those silken fringes,
That hide a happy light,
Almost divine."
The jealous moonlight drifted
To the finger half uplifted,
Where shone the opal ring—
Where the colors danced and shifted
On the pretty, changeful thing.

Just the old, old story,
Of light and shade,
Love, like the opal tender,
Like it, maybe to vary—
Maybe to fade.
Just the old, tender story,
Just a glimpse of morning glory
In an earthly paradise
With shadowy reflections
In a pair of sweet brown eyes.

Brown eyes a man might well
Be proud to win!
Open, to hold his image,
Shut, under silken lashes,
Only to shut him in.
Oh! glad eyes look together,
For life's dark, stormy weather
Grows to a fairer thing,
When young eyes look upon it
Through a slender wedding ring.

THE WIFE'S DEFENDER.

I shall never forget my first vision of William Denton. It was in the court house in Little Rock, Arkansas, in the summer of 1834. The occasion itself possessed a terrible interest, well calculated to fix in the memory all its circumstances. A vast concourse of spectators had assembled to witness the trial of a young and very beautiful girl on an indictment for murder. The judge waited at the moment for the sheriff to bring in his prisoner, and the eyes of the impatient multitude eagerly watched the expected advent, when suddenly a stranger entered whose remarkable appearance riveted universal attention. Here is the portrait, done as accurately as pen can sketch it:

A figure, tall, lean, sinewy and straight as an arrow; a brow, massive, soaring, and smooth as polished marble, intersected by a large blue vein, forked like the tongue of a serpent; eyes reddish yellow, resembling a wrathful eagle's, as brilliant, as fearfully piercing; and finally a mouth slight, cold and sneering—the living embodiment of unbreathed curses! He was habited in leather—ornamented after the fashion of Indian costume, with beads of every color of the rainbow.

Elbowing his way proudly and slowly through the throng, and seemingly altogether unconscious that he was regarded as a phenomenon that needed explanation, the singular being advanced, and with the haughty air of a king taking his throne, he seated himself within the bar, crowded as it was with the disciples of Coke and Blackstone, several of whom, it was known, esteemed themselves far superior to those old and famous masters. The contrast between the disdainful countenance and the outlandish garb of the stranger, excited especially the risibility of the lawyers, and the junior members began a suppressed titter, which soon grew louder and louder around the circle. They doubtless supposed the intruder to be some wild hunter of the mountains who had never before been seen in the halls of justice.

Instantly the cause and object of the laughter perceived it. Turning his head gradually, that he might give each laugher a look of infinite scorn, he ejaculated the single word, "Savages."

No pen can describe the unspeakable malice, the defiant force which he threw into that term; no language can express the infernal furore of his utterance, although it hardly exceeded a whisper. But he accented every letter as if it were a separate emission of fire that scorched his quivering lips, laying horrible emphasis on the "s" both at the beginning and end of the word. It was a mixed sound, intermediate betwixt the growl of a red tiger and the hiss of a rattlesnake—"Savages!" It cured everybody of the disposition to laugh.

The general gaze, however, was then diverted by the advent of the fair prisoner, who came in surrounded by her guard. The apparition was enough to drive even a cynic mad, for hers was a style of beauty to bewilder the tamest imagination and melt the coldest heart, leaving in both imagination and heart a gleaming picture enamelled with fire and fixed in a frame of gold from the stars. It was the spell of an enchantment to be felt as well as seen. You might feel it in the flashes of her countenance, clear as sunlight, brilliant as the iris; in the classic contour of her features, symmetrical as if cut with an artist's chisel; in her hair of rich ringlets, flowing without a braid, softer that silk, finer than gossamer; in her eyes, blue as the heaven of southern summer, large, liquid, dreamy; in her motions, graceful, swimming like the gentle waftures of a bird's wing in the sunny air; in her figure, slight, ethereal—a sylph's or a seraph's, and more than all, in the everlasting smile of the rosy lips, so frank, so serene, so like starlight, and yet thrilling the soul like a shock of electricity.

As the unfortunate girl, so tastefully dressed, so incomparable as to personal charms, calmly took her place before the bar of her judge, a murmur of admiration arose from the multitude, which the prompt interposition of the court could scarcely repress from swelling into a deafening cheer. The murmur was followed by a loud, unearthly moan from a solitary bosom, as of some one in mortal anguish. All eyes were centered on the stranger, and all were struck with surprise and wonder, for his features writhed as if in torture—torture that his rain of tears could not assuage. But what could be the cause of his sudden emotion? Could any connection exist between him and that fairy girl, more beautiful than a blossom of summer, and in countenance celestial as a star?

The judge turned to the prisoner—"Emma Greenleaf, the court has been informed that your counsel, Colonel Linton, is sick, and cannot attend. Have you employed any other?"

She answered in a voice sweet as the warble of a nightingale and clear as the song of a sky-lark: "My enemies have bribed all the lawyers, even my own, to be sick; but God will defend the innocent."

At this response, so touching in its simple pathos, a portion of the auditors buzzed applause and the rest wept. On the instant, however, the leather-robed stranger whose aspect had previously created so much merriment, approached the prisoner and whispered something in her ear. She bounded several inches from the floor, uttered a wild shriek, and then stood pale and trembling as if in the presence of a ghost from the grave. All now could perceive that there must be some mysterious connection between the two, and the scene assumed the profound interest of a genuine romance. The stranger addressed the court in accents as sonorous as the tone of an organ.

"May it please your honor, I will defend the legal rights of the lady."

"What!" exclaimed the astonished judge, "are you a licensed attorney?"

"The question is immaterial and irrelevant," replied the stranger with a sneer, "as your statute entitles any person to act as counsel at the request of a party."

"But does the prisoner request it?" asked the judge.

"Let her speak for herself," said the stranger.

"I do," was the answer, as a long-drawn sigh escaped that seemed to rend the very heart-strings.

"What is your name, as it must be placed on the record?" interrogated the judge.

"William Denton," said the stranger.

The case immediately progressed. We will briefly epitomize the substance of the evidence. About twelve months previous the defendant had arrived in the town and opened an establishment of millinery. Residing in a small, back room of the shop, and all alone, she prepared the various articles of her trade with unwearied toil and consummate taste. Her habits were secluded, modest and retiring; and hence she might have hoped to escape notoriety but for the peculiar gift of that extraordinary beauty, which too often, and to the poor and friendless always proves a curse. She was soon sought after by those gay fireflies of fashion, the business of whose life everywhere is seduction and ruin. But the beautiful stranger rejected them all alike with unutterable scorn and loathing.

Among these disappointed admirers was one of a character from which the fair milliner had everything to fear. Hiram Shore belonged to a family at once opulent, influential and dissipated. He was himself licentious, brave and revengeful, and a duelist of established and terrible fame. It was generally known that he had made advances to win the favor of the lovely Emma, and had shared the fate of all her other wooers—a disdainful repulse.

At nine o'clock on Christmas eve, 1833, the people of Little Rock were startled by a loud scream, as if from some one in mortal terror; while following that, with hardly an interval, came successive reports of firearms—one, two, three—a dozen deafening explosions. They flew to the shop of the milliner, whence the sounds emanated, and pushed back the unfastened door. A dreadful scene was presented. There she stood in the center of the room, with a revolver in each hand, every barrel discharged, her features pale, her eyes flashing wildly, and her lips parted with an awful smile! And there at her feet, weltering in his warm blood, his bosom literally riddled with shot, lay the all-dreaded duelist, Hiram Shore, gasping in the last agony. He articulated but a single sentence: "Tell my mother that I am dead and gone to hell!" and instantly expired.

"In God's name who did this?" exclaimed the appalled spectators.

"I did it," said the beautiful milliner, in her sweet, silvery accents. "I did it to save my honor!"

Such is a brief abstract of the essential circumstances, as developed on the examination of witnesses. The testimony closed and the pleading began.

First of all, Fowler, Pike and Ashley (all famous lawyers at that time in the Southwest) spoke in succession for the prosecution. They about equally partitioned their eloquence betwixt the prisoner and her advocate, covering the latter with such sarcastic wit, raillery and ridicule as to make it a matter of doubt whether he or his client was the party then on trial. As to Denton, however, he seemed not to pay the slightest attention to his opponents, but remained motionless, with his forehead bowed on his hands, like one buried in deep thought or slumber.

When his time came, however, he suddenly sprang to his feet, crossed the bar and took a position almost touching the foreman of the jury. He then commenced in a whisper so wild, peculiar and indescribably distinct as to fill the floor from hall to gallery.

At the outset he dealt in pure logic, analyzing and combining the proven facts, till the whole mass of confessed evidence looked transparent as a globe of crystal, through which the innocence of his client shone luminous as a sunbeam, while the jurors nodded to each other signs of thorough conviction. That thrilling whisper and concentrated argument, and language simple as a child's, had satisfied the demand of the intellect, and this, too, in only twenty minutes. It was like the work of a mathematical demonstration.

He then changed his posture so as to sweep the bar with his glance, and like a raging lion rushed upon his adversaries, tearing and rending their sophistries into atoms. His sallow face glowed like red-hot iron, the forked blue vein swelled and writhed on his brow, his eyes resembled live coals, and his voice was the clangor of a trumpet. I have never, before or since, listened to such appalling denunciation. It was like Jove's eagle charging a flock of crows. It was like Jove himself hurling thunderbolts in the shuddering eyes of inferior gods. And yet in the highest temper of his fury he seemed wonderfully calm. He employed no gesture save one, the flash of a long bony forefinger directly at the pallid faces of his legal foes. He painted their venality and unmanly baseness in coalescing for money to crush a friendless female, till a shout of stifled wrath broke from the multitude, and some of the sworn panel cried "shame!" And thus the orator had carried another point—had aroused a perfect storm of indignation against the prosecutors—and this, also, in twenty minutes.

He changed his theme once more. His voice grew mournful as a funeral dirge and his eyes filled with tears, as he traced a vivid picture of man's cruelties and woman's wrongs, with special application to the case of his client, till half the audience wept like children.

But it was in the peroration that he reached the zenith both of terror and sublimity. His features were livid as those of a corpse and his very hair appeared to stand on end; his nerves shook as with a palsy; he tossed his hands wildly towards heaven, each finger spread apart and quivering like the flame of a candle, as he closed with the last words of the deceased Hiram Shore, "Tell my mother that I am dead and gone to hell!" His emphasis of the word hell embodied the elements of all horror. It was a wail of immeasurable despair—a wild howl of infinite torture. No language can depict its effect on all who heard it. Men groaned, women shrieked, and the poor mother was borne away in convulsions. The entire speech lasted but an hour.

The jury returned a verdict of "not guilty" without leaving the box, and three tremendous cheers, like successive shocks of an earthquake, shook the court house from dome to corner-stone, testifying the joy of the people. At the same moment the beautiful milliner bounded to her feet and clasped the triumphant advocate in her arms, exclaiming, "O, my husband! my dear husband!"

Denton smiled, seized her hand, whispered a word in her ear, and the two left the bar together, proceeded to the landing, and embarked on a steamboat bound for New Orleans. It seems that they previously parted on account of his causeless jealousy, after which she had assumed a false name and come to Little Rock. How he learned her danger I could never ascertain.

TWO SIDES TO IT.

A group of old citizens were sitting around the stove in a grocery, smoking, toasting their shins, and conversing upon different topics. The talk finally turned upon women, and several of the old fellows ventilated their views upon the management of wives.

"Tell ye what," said old Colonel Snodgrass, "that old woman o' mine's a terror when she gits her spine elevated. The only way I kin fotch a good social grin to her face is by tellin' funny yarns, an' she does love to hear 'em, too, jes' sure's yer born. It does me good to get her to laffin' and then give her a dig o' some kind jes' to see her come for me. 'Tother day I told her a lot o' yarns, an' had her in a humor that an angel'd envy. All at once sez I:

"'Sally, hyar's a conundrum for ye.'"

"'Turn 'er loose, Snoddy,'" sez she.

"'Sally,'" sez I, "'why am I like Satan's harp?'"

"She studied rale hard for full two minutes, and then sez she:

"'That 'ars a good 'un, Snoddy, an' I reckon I mus' pass.'"

"An' then she smiled so pooty like that I had a notion to tell her I'd forgot it, but the old Harry gin me a nudge in the ribs, an' I sez:

"'Why, it's 'cause I amuse the devil.'"

"She looked sorter curious a minit', till she began to see the p'int, and then she came to see me, an'—well, gents, this 'yar bald spot on top o' my head growed considerable bigger durin' the ensooin' two minutes. She's got litenin' in her eye yit!"

Old Boggs, of Thirteenth street, sat through the recital, listening eagerly, and as soon as the story was finished got up and left for home. As he walked along he muttered:

"I'll get even with my old Hottentot now for callin' me a bald headed old bow legged snipe!"

When he entered his house he found his wife sewing, and at once began to fire funny stories at her. He kept it up until he got her to laughing heartily, and she wondered what made him so entertaining. She was just beginning to think that she had always underestimated his social qualities, when a peculiar expectant gleam in his eye caught her attention and put her on her guard. After a real funny story, he said:

"Mary Jane, guess this one an' I'll git you a new dress, danged if I don't. Why am I like Satan's harp?" And then he picked up his hat in readiness for a dive out of the house.

She knit her brows and tackled the conundrum in earnest. In a moment he said:

"Aha? I've got you now. You'll have to give it up!"

"Just hold on a minute," she replied, and down came her brows again. Suddenly she sprang up, clapped her hands and shouted:

"I've got it! I've got it! and I want that dress to-day!"

"Not so fast," said he; "ye don't git it till ye win it f'ar. Give us yer answer. Why am I, just at present, like Satan's harp?"

"Because you're an infernal lyre, you old fool!" she yelled, "an' I want that dress!"

He reflected a moment, and then his jaw went down to see his collar button, and he shot out of the house, grabbed a club, and went down town to look for Snodgrass.

WHAT MAKES WATER HARD?—Though insoluble in pure water, carbonate of lime is slightly soluble in water which is already charged with carbonic acid; and, as all rain-water brings down carbonic acid from the air, it is capable of taking up carbonate of lime from the soils and rocks through which it filters; and it thus happens that all springs and rivers, that rise in localities in which there is any kind of calcareous rock, become more or less charged with carbonate of lime kept in solution by an excess of carbonic acid. This is what gives the peculiar character to water which is known as "hardness;" and a water hard enough to curdle soap may be converted into a very "soft" water by the simple addition of lime-water, which, by combining with the excess of carbonic acid, causes the precipitation of all the lime in solution in the form of insoluble carbonate, which gradually settles to the bottom, leaving the water clear.

A JAPANESE HOME.—A Japanese laborer lives in a house of not more than four rooms; one for eating, sitting and sleeping; one for cooking; one for bathing; and one to spare. He never wears boots nor brings mud into the house. He and his family sit on the floor when they eat, and take their meals at a low table. The floor of their dining and sitting room is covered with clean, soft mats, upon which at night cotton comforters are spread to sleep under. Such a house can be built and furnished for one hundred dollars, and though small and cheap is comfortable. The bath, found in all the laborers' houses, is in daily use.

An old Ruby Hill miner, who has had fifteen years' experience underground, says he has observed one peculiar fact, that between 12 and 2 o'clock at night, if there is a loose stone or bit of earth in the mine it is sure to fall. Says he: "About this time it seems that everything begins to stir, and immediately after 12, although the mine has been as still as a tomb before, you will hear particles of rock and earth come tumbling down, and if there is a caving piece of ground in the mine it is sure to give way."—Carson City Appeal.

"Yes," said the young lady, who was going sleigh-riding, to her maid, "I will put on leggins and my thick overshoes. I don't care about my cardinal hose. Mr. Griff is a careful driver. He never upsets."

Stop and Think.

To-night, before you fall asleep,
Let each and every one
Look back and see if he can find
Some good deed that he's done.

But, come to think, we'll take it back,
We've drawn the line too tight;
This little task, we're almost sure,
Would keep some up all night—
And part of the next week.

PALMER.

ITS ADVANTAGES AS A PLACE FOR RESIDENCE AND BUSINESS. — SOME POSSIBLE IMPROVEMENTS.

Editor of the Journal: — Few residents of the town think of Palmer as a beautiful place, yet its location and facilities for business are admitted to be in advance of most of the inland towns of the State. Men leave their homes generally and travel long distances in order to familiarize themselves with the beauties of nature and art. Men who live among the most beautiful surroundings are often unconscious of them. Suppose we try to follow the injunction of the Grecian philosopher, "Know thyself." We shall doubtless find many attractions in Palmer, which, however great they may be, there is a way to make them more attractive.

If upon one of the sunny April days which will soon be here, you should climb the hill known as "Mount Dumpling," do you doubt that you would be charmed by the prospect? Isn't that a pretty village where the Quaboag, Swift and Ware rivers meet, and the Chicopee river comes into being? Can it be possible that that collection of well built houses, nestling so charmingly upon the northerly bank of the Quaboag, is the village, part of which is seen from the Boston & Albany railroad station, and is called Palmer? Compare this village with the one at the meeting of the waters, and see if the difficulty is to decide, not that both are beautiful, but which is more beautiful. To increase your admiration, look at Palmer sometime from the hill in the rear of the State Primary School. Be careful about turning, or those houses clustering in the narrow valley of the Ware river, and climbing the hills upon either side, and the picturesque stone walls of Thorndike will claim and keep your attention, unless your eye follows up the rapid current of Swift river, to Bondville and Duckville, when the similar attractions of those villages will be sure to interest you. You will be charmed with that little lake in the pretty village to the northeast, and also with those hills beyond, and afterward, when you drive among the hills, you will not wonder that they looked beautiful at a distance.

The building of the Boston & Albany railroad long ago determined that the center for the business industries of the town should be upon the extreme southerly border. This condition of things has been detrimental to the best interests of the town, from the fact that the different villages have sometimes been inclined to forward their several, rather than their common interests. The progress which has been made in the village of Palmer for the last few years is most encouraging. The new and pleasant streets, the elegant church, the commodious hall, the private residences which boast not a little architectural beauty, should all be remembered as pointing in the right direction for future improvement.

But after all, the real motive power of the prosperity of a town, the attributes which attract, interest, and retain, are found in the character of the people who live in the town. Every enterprising business man and every citizen, who shows a progressive tendency in any line of improvement, should receive constant encouragement in order to prompt him to further effort. Congratulations instead of envy, should be given by his neighbors to a man whose enterprise has been rewarded by success. It is not good policy for a community to impress upon a man of means the idea that it would deprive him of every dollar if the opportunity should present itself, nor to exercise a repressive spirit toward any meritorious citizen. Neither should men of ability and of wealth show a disposition unduly to control the affairs of a town, for intellect and wealth are two great honors which naturally influence society, and men possessing these powers will come to their proper position without the aid of undue personal effort. It does not injure a citizen if his neighbor is a prosperous, progressive man, but on the contrary he receives a benefit from the impetus which the whole community feels. A disposition on the part of society to extend to strangers a cordial welcome, and to please and interest and elevate the young, to shape their course in the right direction, and to make them love their homes, has a wonderful, energizing effect upon the prosperity of a town. In short, it is necessary to feel that what is best for the common interest is the true individual interest.

It is pleasant to make these suggestions in view of the progress which has been made in the culture, and the social character and disposition of the citizens of Palmer. The immediate future looks bright. The foundation is laid for a large addition to the Thorndike Mills. A new mill will soon be built at Duckville. Both of the hat manufactories are doing a fine business. The Palmer Carpet Company is prosperous. The proprietors of Ridge's Food are making large sales. Mercantile business is good. The condition of the Palmer National Bank and of the Savings Bank shows a substantial business growth. The JOURNAL supplies the demand for a good local newspaper. There are excellent hotels to entertain transient visitors. The public library is increasing its resources and usefulness. The inducements for other business to locate at Palmer are large. The vacant lots adjoining the various railroads afford excellent sites and facilities for a large number of manufacturing establishments. Building space for residences is already limited in the valley, but the neighboring hillsides are pleasant locations for beautiful homes. The numerous railroads centering at Palmer offer cheap and easy transportation for the products of business industries, and also by making New York and Boston and other cities so accessible at all times, cause the town to be most desirable as a place of residence.

Two improvements, at least, should be made at once. Now is the time to secure an abundant water supply to meet the necessities of a growing town. The sandy tract of land near the depots and opposite the hotels ought to be enclosed, turfed, planted with trees, and a fountain placed in its center. Permission to use the land for this purpose could easily be obtained of its owners, the railroad company. The large number of people continually passing through Palmer would then receive a favorable impression, and become conscious of the fact that it is a pleasant and prosperous town.

KEEP AHEAD.

One of the grand secrets of success in life is to keep ahead in all ways possible. If you once fall behind, it may be very difficult to make up the headway which is lost. One who begins with putting aside some part of his earnings, however small, and keeps it up for a number of years, is likely to become rich before he dies. One who inherits property, and goes on year by year spending a little more than his income, will become poor, if he lives long enough. Living beyond their means has brought multitudes of persons to ruin in our generation. It is the cause of nine-tenths of all the defalcations that have disgraced the age. Bankers and business men in general do not often help themselves to other people's money until their own funds begin to fall off, and their expenditures exceed their receipts. A man who is in debt walks in the midst of perils. It cannot but impair a man's self-respect to know that he is living at the expense of others.

It is also desirable that we should keep somewhat ahead in our work. This may not be possible in all cases, as, for instance, if a man's work is assigned to certain fixed hours, like that of the operatives in a mill. But there are certain classes of people who can choose their time for the work which they are called to do, and amongst them are some who invariably put off the task assigned them as long as possible, and then come to its performance hurried, perplexed, anxious, confused—in such a state of mind as certainly unfits them for doing their best work. Get ahead and keep ahead, and your success is tolerably sure.

RELICS OF A PREHISTORIC RACE.

The spot where Des Moines (Ia.) now stands was evidently, at one time, says the Des Moines Register, the burying place of a prehistoric race. The first settlers of Des Moines found many a mound where houses now stand, and their curiosity often led them to make excavations. Many a curious specimen of art work was found deep down beneath the outside covering of muck, which would seem to denote a skill not possessed by the savages, who were then as plenty around Des Moines as they are now on their Kansas reservations. A very remarkable relic was found in a mound some eight feet below the surface, which, under a magnifying glass, reveals a curious and delicate piece of either fine inlaid wood work of different colors, long since petrified, or of peculiar metals or stone, arranged uniquely, resembling the border, moulding or chasing on monogramic jewelry, and bearing an inscription in partly effaced letters, under which is a row of numerals, the whole conjectured to be a coat of arms, badge of tribe, or ensign of official distinction, which was buried on the person of the wearer. It is a small affair, not much larger than a silver dollar, yet a gentleman in Cincinnati once offered its Des Moines possessor $200 for it. Another relic taken from one of these holes was a peculiarly shaped hatchet, very much unlike anything then in use by the American Indians or border whites. It was not of stone, and while certainly of metal, seemed neither iron nor steel, and was so hard that a file made no impression whatever upon its edge.

Robert Burdette, of the Hawkeye, was snowed up in the interior the other day, and telegraphed to the town where he was to lecture that he was coming, and not to begin till he got there, as he wanted to hear the whole lecture. Arriving about 9.30 o'clock p. m., he found the audience singing college songs and waiting patiently. As he walked in the audience arose and struck up "We won't go home till morning." To this he replied that if he had known that he wouldn't have been in such a hurry.

Guiballard recently reproved a friend for his too liberal use of absinthe. "Bah!" said the latter, "I've drank it since I was a boy, and I'm 60." "Very likely," replied Guiballard, "But if you had never drank of it, perhaps you would now be 70."

"I wish I knew what to do to keep my legs from going to sleep," said Gus Spilkins, who is an awful prosy talker. "You can't keep them awake as long as they are in your company, unless you quit talking," was the spiteful reply of his friend.

An aristocratic papa, on being requested by a rich and vulgar fellow for permission to marry "one of his girls," gave this rather crushing reply: "Certainly. Which one would you prefer—the waiter or the cook?"

Boy to papa, who is busily engaged in writing: "Papa, is it wicked to say 'confound you'?" Papa replies, "Confound you, yes! Don't bother me."

Scientists claim that smoking injures the eyesight. But this is not so. The boy with a cigar stump in his mouth can see his father ten streets away.

An epitaph for a faithful car conductor—He took his last fare well.

The Journal.

SATURDAY, MARCH 5, 1881.

CLEMENS HERSCHEL of Holyoke has been appointed to succeed the late A. D. Briggs of Springfield on the board of railroad commissioners.

SECRETARY SHERMAN took time by the forelock, and resigned his office on Thursday, thus relieving President Garfield of any embarrassment he might feel in naming his successor, had the Secretary retained his office until after the inauguration.

SECRETARY SCHURZ has accepted an invitation to a public dinner at Boston, to be given in his honor as soon as he is relieved from his duties at Washington. The invitation was signed by a large number of prominent citizens of Boston and other places.

THE Boers in South Africa routed the British troops after a severe engagement last Sunday, in which Gen. Colley, the British commander, was killed. England is thoroughly aroused over the defeat of her forces, and will forward large reinforcements to retrieve her prestige, and bring the plucky Boers to the dust.

THE United States Supreme Court decided on Monday, in the case of Hallett Kilbourn against Sergeant-at-Arms Thompson, that Congress has no power to imprison or otherwise punish a person for refusing to answer questions before a congressional committee. This is directly contrary to a decision by the same court in a similar case some 80 years ago, and it may have rather an awkward effect in blocking future investigations by Congress.

HENRY WARD BEECHER surprised his people by announcing the other day that he had canceled all his lecture engagements, for the purpose of holding a series of revival meetings. It is a little unfortunate that he is to begin his revival work by breaking other engagements. But there seems to be a felt need for this kind of work in the city of churches, as some fifty of its clergymen have united in appointing next Wednesday as a day of fasting and prayer for a revival.

SENATOR THURMAN of Ohio rapped his Democratic associates sharply over the head last Saturday, figurately speaking, for their wickedness in passing that big steal, the river and harbor appropriation bill. It was a sort of death-bed repentance, as his term has now expired, and he has heretofore been ready to join in these annual raids on the treasury. But even a death-bed repentance is better than none at all, though it had no effect on the majority, the bill being easily passed.

WALL STREET had quite a little panic over the funding bill last week Friday. Money went up and stocks went down at a lively pace, and for a time things looked pretty blue, but Secretary Sherman finally relieved the stringency by ordering the purchase of $10,000,000 in bonds, to be paid for at once. Stocks have been bulled up to the highest possible mark for some time, and it might have been just as well if the Secretary had held aloof, and let them drop to a point nearer their actual value, even if some of the speculators had got badly bitten.

THE House at Washington passed the funding bill Wednesday, with the Senate amendments, and President Hayes promptly vetoed and returned it on Thursday, basing his objections solely on the fifth section, which he considered an unwarranted and dangerous attack on the national banks, which would limit their future extension and endanger the whole banking system, and so the business prosperity of the entire country. The veto will be approved by the business men of the country, almost without exception, even should an extra session be necessary by and by to pass a new funding bill.

EX-PRESIDENT HAYES will carry with him into private life the confidence and esteem of a much larger portion of the country than he had upon entering the White House four years ago. He was then comparatively unknown, but he has shown himself a man of high purpose and fidelity to his convictions of right, and has given the country a clean, wholesome and in many respects an able administration. Specie payments have been resumed, sectional feeling has been largely allayed, and he has done what he could to improve the civil service, while he has courageously stood out against the attempts of Congress to break down the election laws. Mistakes have been made, of course; but not many men in his position have made fewer.

GEN. GARFIELD left Mentor for Washington on Monday, a host of neighbors and friends bidding him farewell at the station, and large crowds giving him enthusiastic greetings at different points along the route where the train halted. The General arrived at Washington Tuesday morning, and since that time has been besieged by a host of callers, anxious to pay their respects to the coming President, and also anxious, many of them, to help him make up his cabinet to suit their wants. The air has been full of cabinet rumors, changing almost hourly, and about the only thing that seems tolerably certain in the matter is that Senator Blaine will succeed Mr. Evarts as Secretary of State, while Robert Lincoln is confidently assigned to the war department. The cabinet may not be announced until Monday. Extensive preparations were made for a grand display at the inauguration yesterday, but the weather was bad for the out-door proceedings, and must have had rather a chilling effect upon them.

Stearns K. Abbott, the Groton murderer of Mrs. Crue, has been sentenced to be hung on the 22d of next April.

AT THE STATE HOUSE.

The Senate is giving a loose rein to the business of making new holidays. A bill was recently passed making Decoration day a holiday, and on Wednesday another bill was passed making January 1 and election day in November legal holidays. The vote was a close one, 19 to 16, and it is questionable whether the measure can get through the House. One senator said he would have a holiday every month if he could.

The House bill to allow the running of through railroad trains on Sunday has passed the Senate, with an amendment that in authorizing such trains the railroad commissioners shall "have regard to the due observance of the day."

The House has passed the bill giving women the right to vote on all matters pertaining to schools.

The committee on liquor law have reported a bill amending the "dollar fine" law so that the court may add a portion of the cost in its discretion, and making the fine $5 for the second and $10 for the third offence within a year, with costs; also a bill requiring that all buildings used by clubs, etc., for the distribution of liquor, shall be deemed common nuisances unless duly licensed. They have also reported the prohibitory bill of 1869, with the proviso that it be submitted to popular ballot next November, and another bill requiring all applications for licenses, except by druggists, to be published at least 10 days before they are acted upon.

The agricultural committee give the petitioners for a law compelling the removal of Canada thistles, and an investigation of ensilage by the Legislature, leave to withdraw, and they do not think any action necessary in regard to our future forest supplies.

The woman suffrage committee have reported a bill giving women the right to vote for town and city officers, and upon all municipal matters, as well as to hold any city or town office; also a resolve providing for a constitutional amendment giving women the right to vote and hold office.

Bills have been reported requiring the selectmen of all towns to appoint next January a physician who, with the chairman of the selectmen, shall constitute a board of health; giving the supreme court jurisdiction to determine the right of the Troy & Greenfield Railroad to redeem the Hoosac Tunnel; authorizing the Hartford and Connecticut Valley Railroad to extend its line from the Connecticut State line north to Holyoke, near the west bank of the Connecticut river; requiring the division of cities and towns of more than 5000 inhabitants into fire insurance districts; requiring that every public school room shall afford to each pupil an average of at least 200 cubic feet of space.

About 150 members of the House sat down to the Legislative banquet at the Parker House Tuesday evening, speeches being made by Speaker Noyes, Clerk Marden, Chaplain Waldron, and others.

A SNOW STORM began in the Northwest Wednesday night and was still raging Thursday night in some sections, being the worst storm known for years. Wisconsin was covered with snow from three to six feet deep; business was entirely suspended at Milwaukee, and not a railroad train was running in the State, trains and the smaller buildings being buried out of sight. All trains at Dubuque, Ia., were abandoned, and at Chicago traffic was almost hopelessly blockaded.

FIRES.—The Congregational church at West Brookfield was struck by lightning Monday evening and burned to the ground, nothing being saved. The loss is nearly $20,000, which is only about half covered by insurance.——The Minnesota State House caught fire Tuesday night while the Legislature was in session, and burned to the ground, entailing a loss of $100,000 on the building, in addition to the destruction of a valuable library. The members had a narrow escape. ——The town of Franklin, Va., was about half destroyed on Sunday by a fire which originated from an explosion. Loss $125,000. ——A conflagration in Tokio, Japan, on the 26th of January, destroyed 11,000 houses, and rendered 30,000 people homeless.

The South Carolinians have not entirely lost their relish for the barbarous customs of slavery times. Two negro thieves broke into a store at Runson's, S. C., on the evening of Washington's birthday, and a mounted party of men went in pursuit of them, guided by five bloodhounds, and captured them after a chase of three or four miles, the hunters enjoying the chase hugely.

A petition is being circulated in Millbury and adjoining towns asking the Legislature to prevent Worcester from turning its sewage into the Blackstone River. There is already an accumulation of some four feet of sewage in the channel of the river, and the petitioners ascribe the large number of contagious diseases prevalent thereabout to the constant stench which arises from the river.

Mrs. S. Sutton of Boston, recently married after a short acquaintance, went to Buffalo, N. Y., with her husband, who soon after gave her some ale to drink, which stupefied her. She went to bed, and he rifled her trunks of the money and jewelry in them, turned on the gas and disappeared. She was discovered the next morning almost lifeless, and her husband has not been seen since.

There were several collisions between ferry boats at New York on Monday, owing to the dense fog, though no serious damage was done. There were also three slight collisions on the elevated railroads, from the same cause.

The Massachusetts Supreme Court has decided, in a Hyde Park case, that under the civil damage law of 1879 no action can be maintained in case of the death of a party injured in consequence of intoxication.

Chicago proposes to celebrate the tenth anniversary of her big fire next fall with a display surpassing anything ever seen in this country. She can hardly get up a bigger show than the fire itself was.

New York city time has been made by law the standard for railroad use in Connecticut, and there is talk of an effort to induce the railroads throughout New England to adopt the same standard.

That large egg to which we alluded last week proved itself more of a curiosity than was at first suspected. When the shell was broken another perfect hard-shelled egg of good size dropped out; and now the question is whether, in buying by the dozen, that eggs, or those egg, would count for one or two?

The selectmen will meet at the town house next Monday, at 10 o'clock a. m., to arrange their accounts for the year, revise the voters' list, and straighten up matters generally in readiness for the approaching town meeting. They are especially desirous that all persons having bills against the town shall present them at that time.

The Postmaster General has revoked that section of the postal regulations which permitted bills, statements, deeds, and similar partially written matter to be sent through the mails at third class rates, and now all such matter must pay the regular letter rate of 3 cents for each half ounce. This will not be a welcome change to business men.

A. C. Kendall, a former resident of this place, who has for some years past been living at San Buenaventura, Cal., writes that peach and almond trees are in full bloom there, barley up and headed out, and everything green and growing finely. All of which leads one to conclude that February in lower California is an entirely different creature from the February that has just departed from this section.

We understand that none of our selectmen will be candidates for the office again, so that, if the report is correct, an entirely new board must be chosen at the approaching town meeting. There are now two weeks remaining for the selection of candidates. There are plenty of men who are well qualified for the office, and we hope an honest effort will be made to "get the best," irrespective of party or other considerations.

George Robinson has disposed of an interest in his hardware store to Frank L. Brooks of Westfield, and the business will be carried on henceforth under the firm name of Robinson & Brooks. Mr. Brooks is a native of Palmer, was clerk for Mr. Robinson during the years 1871–3, and has been in the business for the past five years at Westfield, so that he returns to his old home well qualified for the position he has assumed.

Dr. Arthur Clifford of New Bedford, son of the late ex-Gov. Clifford, shot himself through the heart on Conductor Sedgwick's train between Barre Plains and Winchendon last Saturday morning. He had for some time been under Dr. Russell's care at Winchendon for insanity, and was returning with him from a short trip to New York, where he managed in some way to obtain the revolver with which he took his life. He was about 30 years old.

The Boston Duck Co. has been for some time considering the question of a site for its new mill at Bondville, and has now begun the necessary surveys with a view to its location on the Belchertown side of the river. It is understood that at one time the company fully decided to build in this town, but for certain reasons has felt obliged to reconsider this decision, which is very much to be regretted, as the locating of the mill across the river will be a decided loss, not only to the village, but to the whole town as well.

There are some good suggestions in the article on "Palmer" on the first page, which we hope may be acted upon some time in the near future. We are happy to note that a movement is on foot looking to the organization of a village improvement association in this place. This is a step in the right direction. An active society of this kind would in a short time accomplish more in the way of improving and beautifying our village than is ever likely to be done in any other way, and every citizen ought to give cordial and hearty support to the movement.

The sheet, pillow-case and fancy dress ball at Wales Hall last week Friday evening was a grand success, socially and otherwise. Thirty-three masked couples were in attendance, and the gallery and many seats down stairs were filled with spectators. Some very pretty costumes were worn, and also some ludicrous ones, and all present seemed to enjoy a good time. But imagine the feelings of one young fellow, who had paid the most of his attention to one partner, and found, when the time came to unmask, that although clothed in female attire "she" was of the masculine gender!

At the monthly session of the probate court in Springfield on Tuesday administration was granted on the estates of—Abel Graves of Palmer, Olive S. Graves administratrix; Sylvester Miller of Ludlow, Sylvestia Miller of Westfield and Albert Fuller administrators. Wills proved of—Eudora B. Dumas of Palmer, Charles Dumas of St. Theodocia de Acton, Canada, executor; Betsey Packard of Monson, Lucinda K. Packard executrix. Lovina M. Fenton was appointed guardian of Fred M. Fenton of Monson, and Rice M. Munn of Emily Ann King, insane. An inventory was filed on the estate of Albert Burleigh of Palmer, real $16,135, personal $5673. Accounts were rendered on the estates of Charles Barrett of Palmer and Nelson Calkins of Monson, and affidavits filed on estates of Mary Blakeledge and Moses Hancock of Wilbraham, and Nelson Calkins of Monson.

A fellow who registered at one of our hotels as Willis R. Bird of New London last Sunday, tried to obtain some money from one of our Good Templars, claiming that he was a prominent member of the order in New York; but his story was not very straight and his breath was still worse, and he was arrested on Monday, just as he was about to start off on a train without a ticket. He was brought before the district court on Tuesday and sentenced to the house of correction for three months for vagrancy. He pleaded earnestly to be let off from being sent to Springfield, where it seems he was wanted on the charge of stealing an overcoat. On Thursday Frank Gaffney was before the court charged with stealing doves from Michael O'Grady, but was dismissed, as it could not be proved that he took them from O'Grady's premises. Michael Danifey was up the same day for disturbing the peace Wednesday evening, when he went to a number of houses and tried to get in, calling earnestly, "Mary, open the door and let me in." As Mary did not respond, the judge kindly opened the door to the Springfield retreat, where he will work out his fine and costs of $11.35.

Park street has been in a very lachrymose condition again for the past week. That part of it lying between Central and School streets, with a considerable portion of the adjacent lots, has been converted into a large and handsome sheet of water, ranging from one to two or three feet in depth, and suggesting some very pleasant possibilities for the future. For instance, it would not require a great amount of dredging to make this part of the village a lake of no inconsiderable beauty and of considerable utility for pleasure purposes. As the continuity of the street would be somewhat interrupted by this project, a ferry boat could be put on to convey passengers over the "interregnum," while at the same time the boat would serve an excellent purpose in furnishing children and the poorer classes a cheap and healthful sail in the invigorating breezes of the lake. Its broad bosom would also provide ample room for our young men of aquatic instincts to develop their muscle in those pretty little shell boats, while older people with less muscle and more laziness would find rest and recreation in coursing over the waves in sail boats. The waters could also be stocked with a choice variety of bull-frogs, or, more elegantly speaking, Rana pipiens, whose free concerts every night during the season would have a tendency to develop the taste of our citizens for music, or at least for the hind legs of the musicians, in procuring which a new and appetizing industry would be developed in our midst. Then, too, see what an appreciation there would be in the property all along the lake! We all know how a lake front is prized in Chicago. To be sure, some whose lands would be covered might not like the plan. They don't like it now, but their land is covered just the same; and if any of them were too obstreperous, they might retain their lots and build, a la Venice, traveling to and from their houses in gondolas. A few such houses and boats would lend a pleasing variety to the scene. A gondola or two would have been very useful the past week, although the street was not exactly suited to navigation either by boat or by team, but has been "half horse and half alligator," so to speak. This mongrel condition of things ought not to be tolerated much longer. Let's have a whole horse or a whole alligator—a street or a lake.

Fred exhibited him in Burleigh's store one evening, and while in the warm room the reptile became quite active, but in the cold air would become apparently lifeless. He will probably never celebrate Washington's birthday again.

The exhibition of the club at Central Hall this week has been highly successful, in spite of the very unpropitious weather. The various departments were all well filled, some of them noticeably so. The club has put a large amount of time, labor and expense into the show, and has the satisfaction of making a fine display. In the poultry department the Games take a strong lead, with 35 coops, 17 being entries of Harris & Kinney of Willimantic. Other exhibitors ware Horace Sanders, Chas. Thompson, W. Fay, E. The gun room showed a goodly number of guns, rifles and sporting goods, of all the leading makes and styles. A reading room contained the poultry and sporting papers, magazines, etc. The club's own room was elaborately fitted and opened to the public. MISHAPS AND MISDEEDS.

A Catholic orphan asylum at Hyde Park, Pa., was burned Sunday evening, and seventeen young children—14 boys and 3 girls—perished in the flames. The cause of the fire is unknown, and the large loss of life seems attributable to the fact that the children were locked in their rooms and so could not escape. The boys were all found beneath their cots. Only two of them had been touched by the fire.

A fiendish murder which was committed at China Village, Me., on the 19th ult., came to light the first of this week. Charles Merrill, a young man, killed his mother with a hammer, and after concealing the body a day or two he cut off the head, arms and legs and burned a part of them, throwing the remainder on a manure heap, while he buried the mutilated trunk in the snow in a piece of woods. When arrested he confessed the crime and coolly gave the horrible details. He and his mother had not got along well since last fall, when he voted the Greenback ticket in opposition to her wishes.

Samuel Turner, a man of 81 years, an inmate of the Foxboro poor farm, made a fiendish assault on a sick female inmate of the institution last Saturday night, and then threw her and her young child out of doors, inflicting serious injuries upon them.

Mrs. Erastus Ryther of Leyden, 84 years old and nearly blind, somehow set fire to her dress the other day, and was so badly burned that she died in a few hours.

A young man at Windsor, Vt., was run over and instantly killed by a fire engine on Monday.

Three children at Stephenville, N. Y., were locked in the house by their parents the other day, during their temporary absence, when the little ones began playing in the fire, and one of them was burned to death.

Five men were killed, and others seriously injured, near Macon, Mo., Tuesday, by a wrecking train going through a bridge.

A New York clergyman was brutally assaulted on Fifth avenue by a highwayman the other evening, but declined to notify the police, as he said such affairs were so common in that neighborhood there was no use in complaining.

Wisconsin, Illinois, Iowa, Michigan and Indiana were visited on Sunday by the heaviest snow storm of the Winter, blockading the railroads again badly.

The Government Chemist's Report on Baking Powders.

To the Editor of the Journal:

The recent publication of the report, giving the comparative merits of various Baking Powders, according to tests made by the Government Chemist, has induced some of the manufacturers of brands, whose inferiority was thus brought to light, to resort to various means and publications, in order to rid themselves of the results of that unfavorable exposition of their inferiority.

That the public may fully understand the matter, and to avoid any misconception arising out of statements of our competitors, seeking to break the force of the report, I herewith subjoin the main part of the report, in which the comparative values are correctly given.

Dr. Love's tests were made to determine what brands are the most economical to use. And as their capacity lies in their leavening power, tests were directed solely to ascertain the available gas of each powder.

Name of the Baking Powders.	Available Gas, Cubic inches, per each oz. Powder.	Comparative Worth per Pound.
"Royal" (cream tartar powder)	127.4	50 cts.
"Rumford's" (phosphate) fresh	122.5	48 cts.
"Rumford's" (phosphate) old	32.7	13 cts.
"Hanford's None Such"	121.6	47¾ cts.
"Redhead's"	117.0	46 cts.
"Charm" (alum powder)	116.9	46 cts.
"Amazon" (alum powder)	111.9	44 cts.
"Cleveland's" (short weight ¾ oz.)	110.8	43 cts.
"Czar"	106.8	42 cts.
"Price's Cream"	102.6	40 cts.
"Lewis's" condensed	98.2	38½ cts.
"Andrew's Pearl"	93.2	36¾ cts.
"Hecker's Perfect"	92.5	36 cts.

The Government Chemist also adds: "I regard all alum powders as very unwholesome. Phosphate and tartaric acid powders liberate their gas too freely in process of baking, or under varying climatic changes suffer deterioration."

It is proper to state that all the powders examined were from the open market, and that the original labels were in every case broken by Dr. Love himself. He also informs me that he, himself, purchased the can of Royal Baking Powder at the store of Park & Tilford.

I have only to add that for 20 years the Royal Baking Powder has been before the public, and it is to day the standard for purity and excellence throughout the world. Because of its intrinsic merit, and by virtue of honorable enterprise, the Royal Baking Powder has taken this rank, and I am therefore not surprised to find adventurers in the business anxious to assume their preparations to be its equal.

J. C. HOAGLAND,
President Royal Baking Powder Campany.
New York, Feb. 25, 1881.

A New York factory is engaged in making cheese out of lard, a substance which appears to be particularly adapted to the production of brie and kindred cheeses. Orders for the new lard cheese outrun the supply, and, the label off, no one can tell this variation in oleomargarine from genuine cheese.

TESTIMONIALS.

Westboro, Jan, 25. 1881.
Willard's Patent Truss seems to possess some principles of mechanism well calculated to reach a large number of cases of Hernia hitherto uncontrolled by instruments in common use. Persons so afflicted and disappointed can safely rely on the integrity of Mr. Streeter, the agent, in his guarantee of perfect success. WM. CURTIS, M. D.

Worcester, Dec. 24, 1880.
I have seen the working of Willard's Truss among my patients. I think it a superior instrument, and well calculated mechanically to answer its purpose. It embraces some new principles, and it is worn with ease and confidence by all I know who use it. RUFUS WOODWARD.

Worcester, Dec. 24, 1880.
I am pleased to add my testimony to the utility, simplicity, and apparently perfect adaptation of the truss manufactured by Mr. Geo. A. Willard of this city. J. N. BATES, M. D.

Maximus.

I hold him great who, for love's sake,
Can give with generous, earnest will;
Yet he who takes for love's sweet sake
I think I hold more generous still.

I bow before the noble mind
That freely some great wrong forgives;
Yet nobler is the one forgiven
Who bears that burden well and lives.

It may be hard to gain, and still
To keep a lowly steadfast heart;
Yet he who loses has to fill
A harder and a truer part.

Glorious it is to wear the crown
Of a deserved and pure success;
He who knows how to fail has won
A crown whose lustre is not less.

Great may he be who can command
And rule with just and tender sway;
Yet is diviner wisdom taught
Better by him who can obey.

Blessed are they who die for God
And earn the martyr's crown of light;
Yet he who lives for God may be
A greater conquerer in His sight.

A TRAGIC FATE.

A fearful tale is told in the Port Jervis Union of the fate of Lottie Merrill, the young huntress of Wayne County, Pa. According to this account she met a most tragic death on the 8th of February, being attacked in her hut by six bears, killed and eaten by them, and her body burned with the carcasses of some of them in her cabin. A party of hunters, it is said, at the close of that day found her cabin still burning, and the proofs of the horrible death she had died. It appears that she had been hunting that day, and had killed a fine buck deer, which, after removing the entrails, she had dragged home on the snow. Six hungry bears, drawn by the smell of blood, had followed the trail to her hut, and after devouring the carcass of the deer attacked the huntress, killing her and devouring her body. The girl had evidently made a heroic defence. An examination of the carcasses of the six bears in the cabin showed that she must have killed two of them before being overpowered. The carcass of one bear had fallen against the closed door and imprisoned them all within the cabin, which took fire and burned the others to death. In the cabin was found one of the huntress's heavy boots with the foot still in it, a bent hunting knife near the bones, and the antlers of the deer she had brought home, which with the carcasses of the bears furnished a complete key to the mystery. Her funeral took place on Wednesday the 9th. At least 300 people were present at the funeral, and the old preacher, William Budwick, preached the sermon, relating the story of her death and extolling her bravery and virtue to the skies. The remains were buried near her burned cabin, and over her grave was placed a pair of antlers and a hemlock slab with this rude epitaph:

Lottie Merrill lays hear she dident know wot it wuz to be afeered but she has hed her last tussell with the bars and theyve scooped her she was a good girl and she is now in heaven. It took six big bars to get away with her. She was only 18 years old.

Puck proposes to rename the months, describing them by names which would suggest their most prominent qualities. This would enable children to learn the names readily on the kindergarten plan, and the months, if this sensible plan were adopted, would be named as follows: January would be Slushuary, February would be Slopuary, March would be Winduary, April would be Rainuary, May would be Buduary, June would be Warmuary, July would be Roastuary, August would be Broiluary, September would be Chilluary, October would be Colduary, November would be Frostuary, and December would be Snowuary.

To make shoe pegs eneugh for American use there is consumed annually 100,000 cords of timber, and to make lucifer matches, 300,000 cubic feet of the best pine timber are required every year. Lasts and boot-trees take 500,000 cords of birch, beech and maple, and the handles of tools 500,000 more.

"Your son is getting worse and worse every day," said a teacher. "I don't think he can be quite that bad," remonstrated the partial parent. "Well then he is at least getting worse every other day—say three times a week."

A citizen of Richmond, Va., being asked in London how his town had flourished since the fall of the Southern Confederacy, replied: "Oh, excellently well; we live on red herrings and glorious recollections!"

Wise remark by one Josh Billings: There is a great deal of religion in this world that is like a life preserver, only put on at the moment of immediate danger and then half the time put on hind side before.

"He knows so little that he would find a perfect paradise where ignorance is bliss," is the expressive way in which a young man of small intellecual power was described by an acquaintance.

Extract from a letter from Angelina: "Dear Henry, you asked if I returned your love. Yes, Henry, I have no use for it, and return it with many thanks. By-by, Henry."

In a cemetery in East Blackstone, R. I., stands this sign upon a grave: "This stone is not paid for," with the name of a Providence marble worker affixed.

To the query of a Danbury dentist to an applicant for a new set as to what sort of teeth she wanted, she said: "Something that won't show dirt."

GREAT MERIT.—All the fairs give the first premiums and special awards of great merit to Hop Bitters as the purest and best family medicine, and we most heartily approve of the awards, for we know they deserve it. They are now on exhibition at the State fairs, and we advise all to test them. See another column.

SARSAPARILLA.

THE GREAT BLOOD PURIFIER, KIDNEY REMEDY AND MILD LAXATIVE.

We, the undersigned, having used Dr. Corbett's SHAKER SARSAPARILLA SYRUP in our practice, and having examined the formula by which it is prepared, would cheerfully recommend it to the community as the cheapest, safest, and most efficacious of all the preparations of Sarsaparilla in the market. Its highly concentrated state, (there being in a given amount of Syrup twice the amount of Vegetable Extract that any other contains,) the care, skill, and cleanliness of its manufacture are sure guarantees of its purity and effect. RUPTURE.

Wesley Phillips' Case.

DR. J. A. SHERMAN—Dear Sir: I am happy to inform you that I am entirely cured of my large scrotal rupture. It is one year ago to-day that I received your treatment. I have tested the cure by going without the appliance. My business is that of a locomotive engineer. My rupture, as you will recall to your mind, was similar to Mr. Jordan's, in your pamphlet of illustrations.

I was ruptured in the year 1863, while in the army. I have tried spring and elastic trusses with great discomfort and injury, my rupture always growing worse. Finding I must get some relief or give up my business, I determined to try you as a last resort, and I must say that I found your treatment a complete success. My improvement and cure have, considering my terrible condition, surprised my friends as well as myself. During your treatment I have worked hard in my business, enjoying both safety and comfort, and have not lost a day's work. My general health has also improved. I will take pleasure in recommending the afflicted to you whenever I have an opportunity.

You may publish this letter for the benefit of humanity. My address is 211 East 44th St. With best wishes I remain yours respectfully,

WESLEY PHILLIPS.

New York City, Oct. 25, 1880.

Its Relief and Cure as Certain as Day follows Day.

Since the reduction of Dr. Sherman's terms, thousands are crowding upon him for treatment, gladly throwing away their griping, irksome, dispiriting, and life-punishing trusses. His treatment for this affliction makes the patient comfortable and safe in the performance of every kind of exercise or labor. It is a grand thing, and those who are ruptured and do not provide themselves with it must endure the dangers of that precarious affliction and the use of trusses all through life. Thousands of those cured give the most flattering testimonials to Dr. Sherman. He is the author and inventor of his popular system; he imparts his secret to no one; it is applicable to all classes and cases, and, under his reduced rate, within the reach of every one.

Patients can receive treatment and leave for home the same day. Dr. SHERMAN'S BOOK on Rupture gives convincing proofs from professional gentlemen and others of his successful treatment. It is illustrated with photographic pictures of bad cases before cure, and is sent to those who send 10 cents. Principal office 251 Broadway, New York. Branch office 43 Milk street, Boston. Days in New York—Monday, Tuesday, Saturday; in Boston—Wednesday, Thursday and Friday. 4w49

WILL IT CURE ME?

Said a man whose woebegone countenance and broken-down constitution plainly showed traces of disease—a sufferer with Nervous Dyspepsia, in whose stomach the most delicate morsel lay like lead. Refreshing sleep and quiet nerves were strangers to him, and he despaired of ever being well.

We advised him to take

Simmons Liver Regulator,

which he did, and in a short time was not only relieved but cured.

Reader, if you are suffering with Dyspepsia or Liver Disease in any form, do not wait until the disease has taken a fast hold upon you, but use the Regulator when the symptoms first show themselves. It has relieved untold suffering. SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR is not an alcoholic stimulant, but a PURELY VEGETABLE REMEDY that will cure when everything else fails. It is a faultless family medicine. Does not disarrange the system. Is no violent drastic purge, but nature's own remedy. The friend of everyone, and will not disappoint you. A single trial will convince you that it is the cheapest, purest and best Family Medicine in the world.

ASK the recovered dyspeptics, bilious sufferers, victims of fever and ague, the mercurial diseased patient how they recovered their health, cheerful spirits and good appetite--they will tell you by taking Simmons Liver regulator.

The Rumseller's Song.

The rumseller sat in his den alone,
Singing his thoughts in an undertone,
Shrouded in silence; his work was done
Since the rise and set of the daily sun.
He had squared his books; he had counted his gains;
Then he startled the night with his spirited strains;
And he sang as he hoarded his wages of sin:
"I gather them in! I gather them in!

"The old with their thin and frosty hair,
The young with ringlets dark and fair,
The smiling bridegroom and his bride,
The brother and sister, side by side.
Captive and bound in the toils I spread,
On to their doom my victims tread—
Stranger and neighbor, alien, kin,
I gather them in! I gather them in!

"The statesman, the orator, learned and proud,
The tramps in the rags of the dirty crowd,
The toiler on land, the child of the sea,
By thousands and thousands come trooping to me!
In the golden ray of the morning light,
In the darkness, and stillness, and dead of night,
From the desert waste, from the city's din,
I gather them in! I gather them in!

"Through all ages of time, through all regions of space,
I trade in the blood of the human race!
My license to kill is all free from a flaw,
For the votes of good Christians enacted the law!
The ballots of party I hold in my hand,
And the leaders are hacks to obey my command!"
So the rumseller sang of his wages of sin:
"I gather them in! I gather them in!"

A NOBLE GENTLEMAN.

I sat spinning at my little wheel, in the sun, for the Autumn day was cold, when I heard some one whistling; and, looking up, there was young Squire Turner, with his arms folded on the gate, looking over. When he caught my eye he laughed and I blushed; and I arose and made him a courtesy.

He was a handsome gentleman, the Squire, and the hand from which he pulled the glove shimmered in the sun with pearls and diamonds; he was bonnie to look at with his hair like spun gold in the October sunlight.

When I courtesied he bowed, making his curls dance over his shoulders; and said he: "I've spoiled one pretty picture that I could have looked at all day, but I've made another as pretty, so I'll not grieve. May I come in?"

"And welcome, sir," said I; and I set a chair for him, for he was grandfather's landlord; but for all that I felt uncomfortable, for I was not used to fine company.

He talked away, paying me more compliments than I was used to, for grandmother, who brought me up, always said: "Handsome is as handsome does," and "Beauty is but skin deep."

Since I am telling the story, I'll tell the truth. I had done wrong about one thing. Neither of the old folks knew that I wore Evan Locke's ring in my bosom, or that we had taken a vow to each other beside the hawthorn that grew in the church lane. I never meant to deceive; but granny was old and a little hard, and that love of mine was such a sweet secret. Besides, money seems to outweigh all else when people have struggled their lives through to turn a penny, and they knew Evan was a poor, struggling young surgeon. I thought I'd wait a while until I could sweeten the news with the fact that he had begun to make his fortune.

Grannie came in from the dairy five minutes after the Squire was gone, and heard he had been there. I didn't tell her of his fine speeches, but there was a keyhole to the door she came through, and if I have a guess, she heard them.

That night we had something else to think of. Misfortune had come upon grandfather; but I didn't foresee that when the half year's rent should come due, not a penny to pay it with would be found.

All this time Evan Locke and I had been as fond as ever of each other, and he came as often as before to talk with grandpa on the Winter nights; and still every little while our young landlord, Squire Turner, would drop in and sit in his lazy way watching me knit and spin. Once or twice he was flushed with wine and over bold, for he tried to kiss me. But Squire or no, I boxed his ears for his pains, and no softer than I could help either.

I could not help his coming, nor help seeing him when he came; but I did not deserve that Evan should be angry with me. But he was. Eh, so high and mighty, and spoke as though one like the Squire could mean no good by coming to so poor a place as the schoolmaster's.

He made me angry, and I spoke up:

"For that matter, the Squire would be glad to have me promise to marry him," said I. "He thinks more of me than you do just now."

"Maybe you like him better," said Evan.

"I don't say that," replied I. "But bad temper and jealousy scarce make me over fond of another. I pray I may never have a husband who will scold me."

For he had been scolding me. There was no other name for it.

Well, Evan was wroth with me and I with him—not heart-deep, though, I thought—and I did not see him for more than a week. I was not troubled much, though, I knew he would come around again, and mayhap ask my pardon. For before you are wed you can bring your lover to his senses if you will.

So I did not fret after Evan's absence, nor snub Squire Turner, who liked me more than ever. But one night grandfather came in from a lonely ride, and shutting to the door stood between grandmamma and me, looking at me, and so strangely that we both grew frightened. At last he spoke:

"I've been to the Squire's," he said. "For the first time I had to tell him I could not pay the rent when due."

I opened my lips. Grandmamma's hand covered them. Grandpa drew me to him.

"Thou'rt young, lass," he said, "and they are right who call thee pretty. Say, could'st like the Squire enough to wed him?"

"Eh? Sure you're not wandering?" cried grandma.

"Squire Turner asked me for this lass of ours to-night. Of all women in the world there's but one he loves as he should love a wife, and that is our Agatha."

"I dreamt of golden rings and a bunch of white roses on Christmas eve," cried granny. "I always knew the lass would be lucky." But I put my head on grandfather's shoulder and hid my face. The truth must come out, I knew.

"Wilt have him and be a rich lady?" said grandpa.

And when he had waited for an answer I burst out with a "No" and a sob together.

"She is frightened," said grandma. "Nay, we must all wed once in our lives, my child."

Then grandpa talked to me. He told me how poor they had grown, and how kind the Squire was, and I had but to marry him to make my grandparents free from debt and poverty their lives through. If I refused and vexed the Squire, Heaven only knew what might happen.

"She'll never ruin her poor grandpa," sobbed grandma.

Ah! It was hard to bear—bitter hard; but now there was no help for it. I took the ring from my pocket and laid it upon my palm, and told them it was Evan Locke's, and that I had plighted my troth to him. And grandma called me a deceitful wench, and grandpa looked as though his heart would break.

Oh, I would have done anything for them—anything but give up my true love.

That night I kissed his ring and prayed Heaven that he would love me always. In the morning it was gone, ribbon and all, from my neck. I looked for it high and low, but found no trace of it. And I began to fear the loss of that dear ring was a sign that I would never marry Evan Locke.

The days passed on and he never came near me.

"Oh, it was cruel in him," I thought, "to hold such anger for a hasty word he had provoked, when I spoke it so he must know I loved him so."

And grandma would scarcely look at me (I know why now); and grandpa sighed, and moaned, and talked of the work-house. And I thought I would die of grief among them.

One day grandma said to me, "It seems that your sweetheart is not over fond of you, nor over anxious to see you."

"Why not?" said I.

"Where has he been this month back?"

"Busy, doubtless," said I with a smile, though I thought my heart would break.

"Perhaps you know all about it," said grandma. "You're going with him, maybe."

"Where?" I asked.

She went to the kitchen door and beckoned a woman who sat there—Dame Coombs, who had come over with the eggs.

"I heard you rightly," she said. "You told me Evan Locke and his mother were making ready for a voyage."

"They're going to Canada. My son, a carpenter—and a good one, though I say it—made the doctor a box for his things. The old lady dreads the new country, but she goes for the doctor's sake. There's money to be made there, they say. That is what takes him."

"I told you so," said grandmother.

"I don't believe it," said I.

"They have sold the house, and gone to Liverpool to take the ship; and you may find the truth for yourself if you choose to take the trouble. I'm no chatterbox, to tell falsehoods about my neighbors," said Dame Coombs. And she went away in wrath.

And still I would not believe it until I had walked across the moor and seen the shutters fast closed, and the door barred, and not a sign of life about the place. Then I gave up hope. I went home all pale and trembling, and sat down at grandmamma's knee.

"It's true," I said.

"And for the sake of so false a lad you'll see your grandfather ruined and break his heart, and leave me, that have nursed you from a babe, a widow."

I looked at her as she sobbed, and I found strength to say:

"Give me to whom you will, then, since my own love does not want me."

And then I crept up stairs and sat down on my bedside, weak as though I had fainted. I'd have thanked Heaven for forgetfulness just then, but it would not come.

The next day Squire Turner was in the parlor as my accepted lover. How pleased he was, and how the color came back into grandfather's old face! And granny grew so proud and kind and all the house was aglow, and only I sad. But I couldn't forget Evan—Evan whom I had loved so—sailing away from me without a word.

I suppose they all saw that I looked sad. The Squire talked of my health, and made me ride with him over the moors for strength.

The old folk said nothing; they knew what ailed me. Only our little Scotch maid seemed to think there was aught wrong. Once she said to me:

"What ails ye, miss? Your eye is dull and your cheek is pale, and your braw grand lover canna make ye smile; ye are no that ill, either."

"No, I am well enough," said I.

She looked at me wistfully.

"Gin ye'd tell me your ail, I might tell a cure," she said.

But there was no cure for me in this world, and I couldn't open my heart to simple Jennie. So the days rolled on, and I was close on my marriage eve, and granny and Dorothy Plume were busy with my wedding robes. I wished it was my shroud they were working at instead.

And one night the pain in my heart grew too great, and I went among the purple heather on the moor, and there knelt down under the stars and prayed to be taken from the world; "for how can I live without Evan?" I said.

And I spoke the words aloud, and then started up in affright, for there at my side was an elfish little figure, and I heard a cry that at first I scarce thought earthly. Yet it was but Scotch Jennie, who had followed me.

"Why do you call for your true love now?" she said. "Ye sent him fra ye for sake of the young Squire."

"How dare you follow and watch me?"

But she caught my sleeve.

"Dinna be vexed," she said. "Just bide a wee, and answer what I speer. It's for love of you, for I've seen you waste like a snaw wreath in the sun sin the Squire wooed ye. Was it your will the lad that loved the ground ye trod on should have his ring again?"

"What do you mean?" said I.

"I'll speak, 'gin I lose my place," said Jennie. "I rode with the mistress to young Doctor Locke's house past the moor, and there she lighted and gave him a ring, and what she said I know not, but it turned him the tint o' death, and said he: 'There's na a drop o' true bluid in a woman 'gin she is false.' And he turned to the wa' an' covered his eyes, and your granny rode home. There, 'tis all I ken. Will it do?"

"Ay, Jennie. Heaven bless you," said I.

And had I wings on my feet I could not have come to the cottage door sooner.

I stood before my grandmother trembling and white, and said I: "Oh, don't tell me, granny, you have cheated me and robbed me of my true love by a lie. Did you steal the troth ring from my neck and give it back to Evan, as if from me? You I have loved and honored my life long. I'd rather die than think it."

She turned scarlet.

"True love?" said she. "You have but one true love now—Squire Turner."

"You have done it," I cried. "It is written on your face."

And she looked down at that and fell to weeping.

"My own true love was breaking his heart." she said. "My husband I'd loved for fifty years. I did it to save him. Could I let a girl's fancy worth nothing stand in my way, and see him a beggar in his old age? Oh, girl—girl!"

And then I fell down at her feet like a stone. I knew nothing for an hour or more; but then when I was better, and they left me with Jennie, I bade her fetch my hood and cloak, and her own, and come with me, and away I went across the moor in the starlight to where the hall windows were ablaze with light, and asked the housekeeper to let me see the Squire.

She stared at me for my boldness—no wonder—but called him. So in a moment he stood before me in his evening dress, with his cheeks flushed and his eyes bright, and led me into a little room and seated me.

"Agatha, my love, I hope no mischance brings you here," he began.

But I stopped him.

"Not your love, Squire Turner," I said. "I thank you for thinking so well of me; but even after all that has passed I——"

I could say no more. He took my hand.

"Have I offended you, Agatha?" he said.

"Not you. The offense—the guilt—oh, I have been so sorely cheated!" and all I could do was to sob, and I think he thought me mad.

At last strength came to me. I went back to the first and told him all—how we had been plighted to each other, waiting only for better prospects to be wed, and how, when he honored me by the offer of his hand, I angered my grandparents by owning to the truth, and of the ring granny had stolen from my breast, and the false message that had sent my promised husband from me.

"And though I never see Evan Locke again," said I, "still I can never be another man's true love, for I am his until I die."

Then as I looked, all the rich color faded out of the Squire's face, and I saw the sight we seldom see more than once in a lifetime—a strong young man in tears.

At last he arose and came to me.

"My little Agatha never loved me," said he. "Ah, me! The news is bad—I thought she did. This comes of vanity."

And then, kind and gentle as though I had not grieved him, he gave me his arm and saw me home across the moor, and at the gate paused and whispered:

"Be at rest, Agatha. The Canadian ship Golden George has not sailed yet."

I liked him better than I had ever done before that night when I told granny that I would never wed him.

Eh! but he was fit to be a king—the grandest, kindest, best of living men; who rode away with the break of the morrow and never stopped until he reached Liverpool and found Evan Locke just ready to set his foot upon the Golden George, and told him a tale that made his heart light and sent him back to me. But our young squire. Heaven bless him!

And who was it that sent old grandfather the deed of gift that made the cottage his own, and who spoke a kind word to the gentry for young Dr. Locke that helped him into practice? Still no one but Squire Turner, whom we taught our children to pray for every night. For we were married, and in a few years had boys and girls at our knees; and when the oldest was nigh two, the thing I needed to make me quite happy happened—and from far away over the sea, where he had been three good twelve months, came our Squire, with the bonniest lady that ever blushed beside him, and the Hall had a mistress at last—and a mistress who loved the squire as I loved Evan.

Eh! but it's an old story. She that I remembered a girl I saw in her coffin, withered and old. And then they opened the vault where the Squire had slept ten years to put her beside him; and I've nothing left of Evan, my life and my love, but his memory, and it seems as if every hope and dream of joy I ever had were put away under tombstones. And even the Golden George, the great strong ship that would have borne my dear from me, has mouldered away at the bottom of the sea somewhere. And I think my wedding ring is like to outlast us all, for I have it yet, and I shall be ninety to-morrow.

Ninety! It's a good old age, and it can't be long now before I meet Evan and the rest in Heaven.

EAT SLOWER.

A respectable, elderly lady patient went to London to consult the very highest authority about her dyspepsia and its accompanying ailments. She waited very patiently for her turn, entered the awful presence, told her pitiful story, put out her furred and creased tongue.

The doctor listened, and said: "Um! ah! yes, just so!" Then he looked profoundly, awfully wise.

"Now, doctor, what shall I do? I have tried everything, and nothing does me any good. Can you do anything to help me?"

"Yes, madam; you must eat slower."

She waited for her prescription, but the doctor did not write, and was evidently expecting her to go. He thought she might be hard of hearing, and spoke louder, "Eat slower."

By an involuntary but slight movement of his right hand she saw there was nothing to do but pay the fee. The two guineas dropped, and she sadly left his presence.

Two guineas for two words! But they are richly worth the money. "Eat slower," is very wise and important counsel. There is a time for everything,—and as eating is one of the most important things of our mortal life, the time we take to do it rightly is of very great importance.

Even a railroad disaster occasionally develops a humorous situation. In a recent accident in Canada a man was thrown through one of the windows of a sleeping car into a waste and wintry landscape, attired only in the airy costume of a night shirt. When the conductor reached the earth and surveyed the scene of destruction, the first thing that met his eye was this individual, wildly gesticulating and crying at the top of his voice: "A dollar for the man who brings me my pants."

A wedding party was dismissed by the intended bridegroom at Lafayette, Ind. "I understood the young lady to say yes," he explained, "but it seems that I was mistaken, and she meant to say no."

The question now agitating a colored congregation in North Carolina is, "Who nursed Eve at the birth of Cain?"

The Fashion Now-a-days.

Pretty little maiden,
Tripping down the street,
Cheeks with rose-bloom laden,
Shall I whisper, say you,
Maid of golden tress?
Hitch up your skirt, I pray you,
It's way below your dress!

Quick the hot blood rushes
To her radiant face;
My manly form she pushes
Aside with queenly grace,
Her voice severe but mellow,
As angrily she said:
"Away, insulting fellow!
It's the fashion, mutton-head!"

COLD FEET.

The connection between the head and feet is well known. A hot head is ordinarily relieved by a hot foot-bath. So cold feet tend to congest the brain, and other internal organs.

We have known persons so accustomed to cold feet as to make no effort to warn them. In such cases there is either an imperfect digestion, or a feeble action of the heart, or a low physical state generally.

The whole system of such persons needs to be invigorated by careful exercise in the open air, by a generous diet, by thorough friction of the skin, and perhaps by a brief use of medicines helping the stomach and quickening the liver.

Sometimes cold feet come from overaction of the brain. In such a case the person must use his brain less and his legs more, not by "spurts," but habitually. He should take at least two solid hours from his study, his sanctum, his office, or his counting room, and put them into such exercise as will send the blood at each heart-beat warm and strong to the tips of his toes; and that, too, without any violent exertion.

Sometimes cold feet are caused by tight lacing or tight-fitting shoes. But it is as much a suicidal act to hasten death by compressing the lunch or the feet as by compressing the neck with a rope. The God of physiology is the final judge.

Sometimes cold feet are caused by thin shoes,—the owners of which must be left to die as the fool dieth. Sometimes they come from carlessness in the matter of overshoes and wet feet, a carelessness for which, in the case of children, mothers are largely responsible. It is the duty of the latter to train their girls to right habits based on right ideas, inculcated from early childhood.

If the rising generation will keep their feet warm, there will be a marked diminution in the general death-rate.—Youth's Companion.

WHAT SWEARING WON'T DO.

It wont pay your taxes.

It won't pick you up when you fall.

It won't change 1880 at the top of your letter into 1881.

It won't mend a lamp chimney when you let it drop.

It won't make your corn stop aching when some clod-hopper steps on it.

It won't make a train come back for you when you are one minute and thirty seconds late.

It won't light your cigar when your last match goes out.

It won't help the blunders which the compositor has put in your last article.

It won't keep the nails in your new boots from running into your feet.

It won't shake off the shovelful of snow that has landed on you from some roof.

It won't make you a whit less ridiculous when you lay full-length on a newly waxed ball-room floor.

It won't supply the missing leaf of a novel whether it happens to be the grand wind-up of the plot or not.

It won't smooth out your new silk hat when the baby plants it in the middle of the floor, tries to sit on it and goes head and heels over it.

It won't ease your shins any or make your wife stop laughing, when you fall down the back stairs with a scuttle of coal.

It won't have the least effect on your collar, if it gets unbuttoned and creeps up round your ears in church.

In fine, it won't hasten the dinner or put your wife in better humor, or make a horse car stop for you when you are two blocks away, or get you a postage stamp when the P. O. is shut and your stock run out, or make the member of a brass band next door to you stop "practicing," nor will it help you to get a good position back when you are bounced.

LIMEKILN CLUB APHORISMS.

During the past week the committee of internal harmony has been busy with pen and ink, and as a result Brother Gardner was asked to submit the following maxims to the club for adoption:—

"Advarsity makes heroes, but we doant' want any advarsity."

"Misery lubs company, but de company hain't worf 'soshatin' wid."

"De man obleeged to borry an ax am uebber situated to lend a spade."

"It's none o' yer bizness who libs next doah if he doan' steal your wood."

"Bread cast upon the water may return, but 8 per cent interest, wid a good indorser, am mo' like business."

"De man who kills your chichens am ready to respect you if you kill his dog."

Brother Gardner finished the reading, placed the paper under a weight, and then said:—

"It seems to me dat abstract maxims am like woolen mittens in July. I have no doubt dat one could sot down an' call to mind five hundred mottoes, maxims and sayins dat would read off werry fine, but it would be a useless task. When you have told a man to be honest, industrious an' forgivin', you have got de essence of all de maxims eber written, an' you have given him all de burden he kin b'ar up under. De work of de committee will not be lost, howeber. We will lay de maxims aside until an opportunity offers to send dem to some common council or udder public body."—Detroit Free Press.

A wicked exchange says that "it is mighty embarrassing to a man who has some religious friends staying with him to have his dog, which has been very quiet during week days, begin right after breakfast Sunday to run to the gun in the corner and then to his master, and wag his tail and then run back to the gun again."

An old couple were walking down street the other day reading signs, when they ran across one which the old man read: "Johnson's Shirt Store." "Well, I declare!" exclaimed the old lady, "I wonder how he tore it?"

PROHIBITION IN MAINE.

Probably you do not know that the Maine law is now and always has been attacked on two lines. First, that it is a dead failure, inasmuch as more liquor is sold and consumed in Maine, as the result of it, than even before; and secondly, that the sharp suppression of the grog shops has demoralized the people and ruined the business of the State. The same persons laid the attack on both the lines. I hope the good people of the country will not be alarmed lest the suppression of the liquor traffic in Maine shall result in driving the people back to barbarism. Some of the drinking men of the State are very anxious on this score, and plead piteously for the return of the good old rum times when liquor could be had anywhere in respectable places, whereas now it is only to be found in low, secret, dirty dens. I do not think our people are alarmed at the prospect of a general demoralization as the result of the suppression of the grog shops. Within four months after the enactment of the law the jails in the counties of Kennebec, Franklin, Oxford and York were entirely empty; the jail in Cumberland contained only five prisoners, three of them rumsellers, whereas before the law it had been habitually overcrowded. The house of correction in Cumberland county was also empty, while before the law it had been too small for its inmates. The Maine law has suppressed entirely every distillery, brewery and wine factory in the State, and has extirpated fully nineteen-twentieths of the liquor traffic. Some low, vile grog shops yet remain in our large cities and towns, and will do so until we can procure some slight additions to the law as it now stands. The discretion of our courts, as of yours, I am sorry to say, is often employed to make the path of the rumseller easy instead of thorny, and we shall not be able to expel the liquor traffic from our borders thoroughly until the courts shall be deprived of all discretion in liquor cases. We have no difficulty whatever with our juries, which are prompt always to convict rumsellers when the evidence will warrant it; the trouble is in the courts, either before conviction or after it. The number of our convicts in prison is swollen very largely by convicted rumsellers. We have had more than 50 of them at one time in Cumberland jail, for terms ranging from three months to 36 months. Before the Maine law we had none of this. Two years ago I took pains to ascertain the number of convicts in prison in Maine and the number in Massachusetts, the latter being four times more than the former in proportion to the population. From the day of the enactment of the Maine law, in 1851, to this day no incident has occurred to justify the declarations so often made, that it is a failure; on the contrary, it has been and is now in every way a great success.—Neal Dow.

A PLEASANT PICTURE.—"There is a man," said a village carpenter, "who has done more good, I really believe, in this community than any man that ever lived in it. He cannot talk very well in prayer meeting and he doesn't often try. He isn't worth $2000, and it's very little he can put down on a subscription paper for any purpose. But a new family never moves into the village that he does not find time to give a neighborly welcome, and offer any little service he can render. He is usually on the lookout to give strangers a seat in his pew at church. He is always ready to watch with a sick neighbor, and look after his affairs for him, and I've sometimes thought he and his wife kept house plants in winter just for the sake of being able to send little bouquets to invalids. He finds time for a pleasant word to every child he meets, and you will always see them climbing into his one horse wagon when he has no other load. He really seems to have a genius for helping folks in all sorts of common ways, and it does me good every day just to meet him on the street."

A horse at Faribault, Minn., turned loose in his master's dooryard, saw a basket hanging on a pole about seven feet from the ground. It contained a pet cat. The horse walked to the basket, put his nose up to investigate it, and the cat gave the intruding nose a lively scratch. The horse turned around, looked back over his shoulder as though to take aim and measure the distance, kicked, and cat, basket and all shot into the air like a rocket. The horse watched the success of the shot, then gave a low whinny of delight and walked away.

A New Jersey child having recently suffered with an aggravated case of stomach ache, the family doctor dosed the infant with proper remedies, and the following articles which had been swallowed by the child at odd times were recovered, viz.: Ten lima beans, thirty-eight pins, five needles, three half needles, five tacks, one fourpenny nail, one match, half of wooden toothpick, one pebble, three buttons, half hickory nut, three large safety pins, (shut), and six hair-pins. The child is doing well.

A young lady slipped on the ice and lay there recklessly waiting to be rescued. A clerk in a hosiery store, who was standing near the scene of the disaster, viewed the spectacle with professional curiosity a moment or two and then exclaimed: "Pretty, very pretty: but they only cost thirty-six cents a pair!"

A country girl at a fashionable hotel in New York noticed that all the guests used their forks only, in eating their pie. Upon her return home she reported the fact to her old lady, who comforted her by observing, "You shouldn't mind 'em, Jemima; it's all because they're too lazy to use their knives."

At a Land League meeting in Ireland the other day an impassioned speaker was thus declaiming: "Our Creator gave the land to man for his own; He gave it first to Adam—" "Arrah, be aisy about Adam," interrupted a voice from the crowd; "Adam was evicted widout compensashin."

Last summer she was eating green corn by gnawing it from a cob, when her teeth became entangled with a corn silk. "Oh, dear," said she, impatiently, "I wish when they get the corn made they would pull out the basting threads!"—Cincinnati Saturday Night.

A German chemist has established the valuable fact that wood impregnated with paraffine oil is preserved for many years from rot, even under circumstances most favorable to decay.

"Up and add 'em!" as the school teacher said to the boy who was sleeping over his examples.

The Journal.

SATURDAY, MARCH 12, 1881.

GEN. GRANT and wife breakfasted with President Garfield at the White House Wednesday morning.

A REPORTER has been interviewing Wm. H. Vanderbilt, who told him "the nicest thing in the world is to be satisfied with what you have," which he professes to be, with his $100,000,000 or more. What a contented, unambitious man, to be sure!

PRESIDENT GARFIELD has appointed Levi P. Morton of New York to be minister to France, and ex-Secretary Evarts, ex-Senators Thurman of Ohio and Howe of Wisconsin, to be commissioners to the international monetary conference at Paris. The selection of Mr. Thurman is a very graceful recognition of the merits of an able political opponent.

HON. HENRY CHICKERING of Pittsfield, postmaster of that place for the past 20 years, and a prominent Mason, died last Saturday of heart disease and dropsy, at the age of 62. Mr. Chickering has been editor of the Berkshire County Eagle since 1855, has been prominent in the Republican party since its organization, and as a citizen and friend was universally esteemed.

EX-PRESIDENT HAYES came uncomfortably near being injured by a railroad accident last Saturday, on the Baltimore & Potomac Railroad, the train he was in being run into by a train of empty cars, which was running contrary to orders. One passenger and one train man were killed, and several persons injured, but Mr. Hayes and his party escaped unharmed, their car being near the rear end of the train.

MANAGER GARDNER has resigned his superintendency of the State railroad, to take effect on the 31st inst, apparently finding himself between too many fires to be agreeable. He has sent to the Governor a reply to the recent findings of the railroad commissioners concerning the accident at Bardwells, and seems to clearly show that the commissioners have an undue leaning to the interests of the Fitchburg road. The intimation ought to be looked into.

THERE is not much probability that President Garfield will call an extra session of Congress to pass a funding bill. An amendment to the sundry civil bill, passed before Congress adjourned, permits the secretary of the treasury to use his surplus money for the purchase or redemption of bonds, and as he already has the right to issue $104,000,000 of four per cents for the same purpose, he will be able to do enough at refunding so that it will hardly pay to get Congress together again.

THE Democrats in the United States Senate have decided to utilize the party advantage they enjoy just now on account of the vacancies existing on the Republican side of the chamber, and reorganize the committees in their own interests. The Republicans do not like such treatment, and refuse to present a list of names for committee membership until the vacancies are filled. Should the Democrats persist, the Republicans hope to be able at an early day to again reorganize the Senate, with the help of Mahone of Virginia and the vice president's casting vote.

THE Delaware Democrats fairly out-Bourbon the Bourbons. The House of Representatives last week Friday, by a strict party vote, passed a resolution declaring their "stern reprobation of the great fraud perpetrated on this day four years ago," and regretting the elevation to the presidency of one of the chief actors in the perpetration of that fraud. Strange, how morally blind the people of the United States have been in the matter! But then, only a comparatively small portion of the country enjoys the advantages of Delaware civilization and whipping posts.

The New Cabinet.

President Garfield completed his cabinet slate last Saturday afternoon, and sent the names to the Senate for confirmation, as follows:

SECRETARY OF STATE—James G. Blaine, of Maine.
SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY—William Windom, of Minnesota.
SECRETARY OF THE NAVY—William H. Hunt, of Louisiana.
SECRETARY OF WAR—Robert T. Lincoln of Illinois.
ATTORNEY GENERAL—Wayne MacVeigh, of Pennsylvania.
POSTMASTER GENERAL—Thomas L. James, of New York.
SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR—Samuel J. Kirkwood, of Iowa.

This list was confirmed without any special opposition, though Conkling was not really happy over it, and Cameron would have been glad to defeat MacVeigh if he could have done so. In making up his cabinet, President Garfield has evidently tried to combine and harmonize the different elements of the party, and he seems to have accomplished his purpose very successfully. Some of the appointments may not be ideal ones, possibly, though nothing could be better than the promotion of Postmaster James of New York to the head of the post office department, and as a whole the cabinet gives excellent satisfaction.

The Springfield Silk Company has been forced to suspend, on account of the dishonesty or inefficiency of the treasurer, Henry W. Hallett, $60,000 having slipped through his hands without any corresponding benefit accruing to the company. C. H. Lockhart, the New York selling agent, seems to have reaped most of the pecuniary benefit from the transactions. Hallett is in Colorado, where he went in December for his health.

A cremation society has been organized in New York. All active members will be cremated without charge.

THE INAUGURATION.

Rarely has the country witnessed a finer spectacle than was afforded by the ceremonies attendant upon the inauguration of President Garfield at Washington last week Friday. The storm, which threatened to bring to naught the elaborate preparations that had been made for the out-door parade, broke away in the morning, and the programme was carried out to the full satisfaction of the thousands who lined the streets and filled the Capitol to overflowing. President Hayes rode to the Capitol with President-elect Garfield, and after the opening of the extra session of the Senate, which had been called by the President, and the swearing in of the new Senators, the assembled dignitaries repaired to the east portico of the Capitol, where Garfield delivered his inaugural and was sworn in. After receiving the congratulations of the surrounding officials the President and party returned to the White House, and taking their position on a stand reviewed the grand procession which for two hours filed by, making a magnificent display. In the evening President Garfield attended the inauguration ball in the national museum building, which was successful in a high degree, and was largely attended.

The inaugural address of President Garfield is admirable in every respect, and if his administration is characterized by the same high moral tone and clear sense of justice as mark the address in an unusual degree, there will be small chance for complaint. Beginning with a brief historical review of the one hundred years of progress since the adoption of the first written constitution of the United States, and alluding to the "supreme trial of the constitution under the tremendous pressure of civil war," he declares that "the nation is resolutely facing to the front, resolved to employ its best energies in developing the great possibilities of the future." He deprecates further discussion of the supremacy of the nation and its laws, which has been irrevocably settled "in the high court of war," and calls upon all the people to "leave behind them the battle-field of dead issues, and move forward to grander victories." But, while taking advanced ground as to the need of a broader nationalism in our politics, the President does not abate one jot of the just claim for equal rights to equal citizens, and a fair and free ballot for all. His tribute to the remarkable progress of the emancipated race, and his plea for their generous encouragement, are alike just and worthy. The difficulties in regard to the suffrage, on both sides of the question, are stated with great frankness. But, though conceding the evil of bad local government through the misleading of ignorant voters, the President truly says that the violation of the freedom and sanctity of the ballot is more than an evil—it is a crime—which, if persisted in, will destroy the government. "Suicide is not a remedy." A ballot kept free and pure by the strong sanctions of law is the only source of safety or repose. The peril of ignorance he paints in startling colors, and urges, as he has often done before, that "the nation itself is responsible for the extension of suffrage, and is under special obligations to aid in removing the illiteracy which it has added to the voting population." He eloquently appeals to the country to make speedy and final settlement of all questions springing from the war. Fifty years hence, he urges with truth, our children will not be divided in their judgments concerning these questions. Upon financial questions the President is, of course, thoroughly sound. He is in favor of maintaining both gold and silver in use as money, but at ratios corresponding to market value, and fixed internationally. He would remove the legal tender quality from the greenback, and not disturb the banks in refunding. Other measures particularly urged are the improvement of agriculture by giving to the tillers of the soil the best lights of practical science and experience; the improvements of water routes and transportation by sea; the construction of an interoceanic canal under control of the United States; and the suppression of polygamy. He would have the tenure of minor offices fixed by law, and the grounds upon which removals may be made during the terms for which incumbents have been appointed definitely prescribed, and he says he shall "require the honest and faithful service of all executive officers, remembering that the offices were created not for the benefit of the incumbents or their supporters but for the service of the Government."

FIRES.—The insane asylum at Danville, Pa., which was some 11 years in building, and was completed only last year, at a cost of $600,000, was almost entirely destroyed by fire Sunday morning. The 350 inmates were safely removed.——The cotton seed oil works at Hickman, Ky., and a boarding house were burned last week Friday, a man and woman perishing in the flames.—Putnam, Ct., had a $25,000 incendiary fire on Sunday.

Chicago was quite a sufferer from last week's snow storm. The snow was piled up in the streets as high as the second story windows, all the schools were closed, and all kinds of traffic pretty thoroughly blockaded. Milk trains could not get through on the railroads, and there was a milk and egg famine in the city. The railroads were cleared the first of this week, and the widespread blockade is now at an end.

Frank S. Richardson of North Adams narrowly escaped strangulation in a singular manner the other night. Having a sore throat he bandaged his neck when he went to bed, and the next morning was found almost dead, his neck having swollen sufficiently to stop the circulation of the blood, and it was a difficult matter to restore him to consciousness.

An earthquake on the island of Ischia, off the coast of Italy, destroyed half of the town of Casamacciola last week Friday afternoon. Two hundred houses were thrown down and many others made uninhabitable. The loss of life will considerably exceed 100.

PALMER AND VICINITY.

The bluebirds have come.

St. Patrick's Day next Thursday.

The sun don't retire until after 6 o'clock now.

The river is full, and the moon will be next Tuesday.

Walter Chilson has taken the position of clerk in White Hellyar & Co's. store.

Quite a number of our people attended the excursion to the Worcester skating rink Tuesday.

According to rumor, Palmer will have several representatives on the excursion from Boston to San Francisco.

The Boston & Albany road now runs a through car from Boston to Montreal, and has advanced the price of through tickets to $3.

J. F. Holbrook has received notice that the missing cargo of coal which was shipped to him in December, has just arrived at New London.

An adjourned meeting of the Young Men's Library Association will be held next Monday evening, to act upon a proposed amendment to the by-laws.

There will be 12 hours and 1 minute of sunshine next Thursday, the day and night being as nearly equal in length as they will get this spring.

The following scholars in the second primary school in this village were neither absent nor tardy during the past term: Mary Thompson, Bertie Hunt, and Frank Roach.

Wednesday and Thursday's rain was followed yesterday morning by a snow-fall of 3 or 4 inches, which gave out-door things quite a wintry appearance again, for a season.

H. H. Nash of Worcester will preach at the Advent chapel Sunday. There will be preaching also Wednesday evening at 7.30, by Elder Albion Ross from New Hampshire.

The last half of Prof. Holland's series of lessons in dancing starts off with a number of additional pupils, and with an orchestra of three pieces. The school will close next month with a grand ball.

The selectmen have engaged E. L. Greenleaf of Dana to take charge of the town farm for the year beginning April 1. Mr. Greenleaf has had charge of the Brimfield, Hardwick and Dana farms, and is well recommended for the position.

During the past term Estella Howard, Willie Brakenridge and John Roach were perfect in attendance at the grammar school. In the intermediate school Julia Allen, Lillie Allen, Willie Eaton and Alfred Farland were neither absent nor tardy.

A Monson man is reported to have lost $30 by gambling in one of our saloons a few evenings ago. Probably the saloon keeper did not know such proceedings were unlawful, and would be greatly put out if his license should be revoked in consequence.

About a dozen new names have been added to the voters' list. Any voter who has not yet registered should attend to the matter promptly. The selectmen will be at the town house next week Saturday evening to make the final revision of the list, prior to the town meeting.

The high school closed yesterday for a vacation of two weeks, the exercises in the afternoon consisting of declamations, essays, etc. Principal Whiting stimulated his pupils to do their best, by offering prizes for the best composition, and the first and second best declamations.

The United Workers cleared about $50 by their dramatic entertainment last week Friday evening, and the ladies of St. Paul's church netted something over that amount by their supper and entertainment at the church Wednesday evening, there being a good attendance on both occasions, in spite of the unpropitious weather.

Barney Gallaher, who has seen sixteen years of continuous service in the employ of the New London Northern Railroad, is at last, on account of his health, obliged to take a vacation. During these sixteen years not the slightest accident has ever occured through any fault of his, which is quite noticeable considering the numerous casualties occasioned by misplaced switches.

Hubbard Lawrence has come off victorious in a suit brought against him recently by E. P. Clark of Northampton for $600. Mr. Clark has acted for some years as agent for Mr. Lawrence in renting a house at Northampton, and he claimed that the rent did not equal the expenses. Mr. Lawrence, on the contrary, showed that the rent had exceeded the expenses, and the auditor gave a verdict in his favor, throwing the costs upon Mr. Clark.

The last farmers' institute of the season will be held at Weeks Hall next Tuesday, at 10 a. m., when the subject of feeding and raising stock will be considered. J. E. Russell, secretary of the Board of Agriculture, J. M. Bailey of Billerica, the well known advocate of the ensilage system, and E. F. Bowditch of Framingham will be present and speak, adding materially to the interest of the meeting, and doubtless making this one of the best of the season.

The warrant for the town meeting will be found in another column, and its 33 articles will furnish material enough for a two-days' meeting, if properly considered. We believe the town might profitably devote one day to the election of its officers, leaving the business matters to be taken up at a subsequent meeting, when there would be time and opportunity to duly consider the questions presented, without the distracting noise and confusion incident to election day.

The union prayer meetings already begun in the churches of the town are to be continued in a series in the following order of dates and places: Methodist church, Bondville, March 14; Union church, Three Rivers, March 21; Baptist church, Palmer, March 28; Methodist church, Four Corners, April 4; Congregational church, Thorndike, April 11; Baptist church, Three Rivers, April 18; Congregational church, Palmer, April 25. The time of these services is to be 7 o'clock p. m.

The Boston & Albany Railroad has this week adopted a new plan for furnishing its passengers for New York refreshments at their leisure, without leaving their seats. Soon after leaving Boston orders for lunches are taken and telegraphed to Springfield. On reaching that city they are delivered on the train in baskets especially designed for the purpose, and containing plates, knives and forks, napkins, and a flask for tea, coffee or milk—nothing stronger, we suppose. The passengers can then eat as slowly as they choose, the baskets being collected at New Haven. This system will doubtless become quite popular, and its adoption on this and other roads generally would be appreciated by the traveling public.

The town political pot has hardly begun to boil yet, and the "mentioning" of names for the offices to be filled is only in its incipient stages. R. L. Goddard is spoken of for one of the selectmen, and if he would consent to serve would make an excellent man for the place. Henry G. Loomis, one of our best young business men, is also suggested as an excellent candidate for the office. No names are yet brought forward from the other villages, but some will doubtless be developed next week, and from the list brought out it will not be a difficult matter to select a good strong board. Rev. Mr. Fullerton will without doubt be his own successor as school committee, as is fitting for one who has filled the office so long and well.

The village schools in town, with the exception of the high school, will begin their spring term on the 21st inst., but the schools in the outlying districts will not resume until a week or two later. Miss McEwen will take the primary school at Bondville, in place of Mrs. Wells, and Sarah E. Knox will succeed Miss Mills in the second primary school at Three Rivers. Miss Kerigan, who taught at Blanchardville, having stepped into another sphere of life, is succeeded by Mary Snow, who has taught in the Whiting district, and the latter school will come under the charge of Miss Ella Green. It will be noticed that the village schools are to begin a week earlier than usual, the committee thinking it better to make the summer vacation correspondingly longer.

We understand that our former townsman, W. W. Cross of Brockton, who has been chairman of the selectmen of that town the past year, was one of the leading advocates of the system of treating the liquor question which has been in force there for eight months. The selectmen issued no licenses, but established a dispensary where their agent sold pure liquors in any quantity wanted, not to be drank on the premises, their idea being that in this way they could control the business and keep it in responsible hands, while the town would reap all the profits ensuing, and the customers would be sure of obtaining good liquors. This is something after the plan which has proved so successful at Gothenburg, Sweden, where the only liquor saloon in the place is owned and run by the city. The Brockton selectmen have been very sanguine of the ultimate success of their plan, and during the time it has been in operation the town has reaped quite a substantial income from it. But many of the liquor saloons have continued selling, and the liquor dealers and their friends have of course been opposed to the innovation, while the radical temperance men have been no less against it. At the town meeting on Monday there was an exciting time on the question of retaining the system, and its enemies mustered enough votes to defeat it by a plurality of 21 votes in a total of nearly 1700, three of the selectmen elected being in favor of free license. So the plan falls to the ground, to the regret of many who would like to see it practically and thoroughly tested in this country.

THE TOWN REPORTS.

The town officers have made up their reports for the past year, and they are now in the hands of the printer, excepting the report of the school committee. The financial showing is not quite as good as last year, but there has been a new bridge to build, three or four required extensive repairs, and there have been other extraordinary expenses to swell the sum to a larger total than usual. The treasurer's report shows receipts for the year of $38,418, including the balance of $3524 on hand at the beginning of the year. The expenditures were $38,353, leaving a balance of $65 in the treasury. The leading expenditures have been: Schools, $13,645; support of poor, $3599; highways, $2576; bridges, $3032; contingencies, $2397; Dublin and River streets, $1401; library, $500; sewer at Depot village, $408; Walnut street, $395. The whole number of paupers admitted to the town farm was 18; average number 12¼. Cost of supporting poor at farm, $1558; not at farm, $1841. The calls for outside help have been more numerous than usual, owing to the severity of the winter. The selectmen say that more room is needed at the poor farm, and recommend finishing off two rooms in the wood room. Only 183 tramps have been lodged and fed, against 890 the preceding year, and the cost of maintaining the lock-up and tramp room was $265.

The total claims against the town are $3071, including two notes amounting to $2300; and there is $2415 due the town, including $1200 in unpaid taxes, which leaves a net balance of $656 against the town. The selectmen again call the attention of the town to the bad condition of the highways, and urge that a change be made in their management—a recommendation to which the voters ought to give their serious attention. We are spending a good deal of money every year on our roads, but they do not improve a particle from year to year. The appropriations recommended for the coming year are: Paupers, $3500; contingencies, $2500; highways, $2500; bridges, $1000; railings, $200; interest, $115; library, $500.

Appropriations: Town and pauper expenses, $3000; support of schools, $4000; repairing school houses, $500; town debt and interest, $3500; roads and bridges, $2000; total, $13,000. Voted unanimously to authorize the selectmen to borrow money to pay the debt of $2000 due the State April 20.

At the Grace Chapel Society parish meeting on Monday evening it was voted to have the pulpit supplied the coming year by the same persons as last year, and $700 was granted for parish purposes. The treasurer's report showed an excess of about $95 over the expenses for the year, which will probably be applied toward paying the debt, which is now about $600. The parish committee for the year ensuing are: Phineas Knowlton, E. B. Gates, H. Cutler; Treasurer and collector, E. H. Cutler; Clerk, S. E. Baker; Organist, E. W. Wall; Soliciting committee, A. E. Bell and C. E. Stacy.

They make a specialty of selling wood ready cut for use, running their saw by horse power, and turning out the wood at a rapid rate. A few days ago they sawed up half a cord in 13½ minutes, making over 400 cuts.

S. B. Parmenter, overseer of the ring spinning, spooling, ruling, etc., and George A. Lane, overseer of the weaving, have both severed their connection with the Palmer Mill after a service of about seven years. They will both be missed very much in the village, especially by the Union Evangelical church, of which they have both been members from its organization. They have always given liberally of their means to the regular running expenses of the church and for charitable purposes, and when the new house of worship was built Mr. Parmenter and Mr. Lane were each among the largest contributors to the building fund. Mr. Parmenter is succeeded by E. Chase, overseer of the mule room, who takes Mr. Parmenter's department in connection with his own. Mr. Lane is succeeded by William Cheney, who has been his assistant for a number of years past.

TO THE HONORABLE THE JUSTICES OF THE SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT, next to be holden at Springfield, within and for the county of Hampden, on the fourth Tuesday of April, A. D. 1881.

Humbly shows Peter Verran of Palmer, in said county, that he was lawfully married to Emma Verran, then Emma Bonney, of Sturbridge, in our county of Worcester, and now of Warwick, Kent county, and State of Rhode Island, at Southbridge, in said county of Worcester, on the seventeenth day of January, A. D. 1879, that they have since lived together as husband and wife in said Sturbridge about one month, since which time they have lived separate and apart from each other, and he has ever conducted towards her as a faithful, chaste and affectionate husband, yet the said Emma, regardless of her marriage vows and obligations, on or about the fourteenth day of February, A. D. 1879, at said Sturbridge, committed the crime of adultery with a person to your libellant unknown, but whose Christian name was Liberty, and on or about the twelfth day of October, A. D. 1880, at Centreville, in said Warwick, committed the crime of adultery with some person to your libellent unknown, and on divers other days between her said marriage with him and this date committed the crime of adultery with divers men to your libellent unknown.

Wherefore he prays that the bonds of matrimony heretofore existing between him and the said Emma Verran may be dissolved, and for such further orders and decrees in the premises as to law and justice may appertain.

Dated Jan. 31, 1881.
His
PETER ✕ VERRAN.

TESTIMONIALS.

Westboro, Jan. 25. 1881.

Willard's Patent Truss seems to possess some principles of mechanism well calculated to reach a large number of cases of Hernia hitherto uncontrolled by instruments in common use. Persons so afflicted and disappointed can safely rely on the integrity of Mr. Streeter, the agent, in his guarantee of perfect success. WM. CURTIS, M. D.

Worcester, Dec. 24, 1880.

I have seen the working of Willard's Truss among my patients. I think it a superior instrument, and well calculated mechanically to answer its purpose. It embraces some new principles, and it is worn with ease and confidence by all I know who use it. RUFUS WOODWARD.

Worcester, Dec. 24, 1880.

I am pleased to add my testimony to the utility, simplicity, and apparently perfect adaptation of the truss manufactured by Mr. Geo. A. Willard of this city. J. N. BATES, M. D.

Ode to an Oyster.

Dichlamydeous dainty! Bivalvular beauty!
Conchiferous creature, to prove thee is duty.
Stranger from Chincoteague! Saliferous stranger,
Art thou, when swallowed, an epizoon ranger?
Monocular morsel!
With never a dorsal,
Whence thy maternity?
Whence thy paternity?
Whence thy fraternity?
Art thou nomadic? or of nature sporadic?
But mayhap thou'rt addicted to silence?
So!
In thy submergence—
Excuse the divergence—
This superexcrescence—
Saving your presence,
Then proved thy salvation,
But annihilation
Awaits thee.
Waiter!—this shell—
Open it well!
Succulent snoozer—there you are—you, sir!
There on the fork—light as a cork,
I raise thee,
And praise thee!
Thou'rt gone! Thy lot is sad!
—Here, waiter! confound you—that oyster was bad!

WHITE LIES.

Not a day passes, probably, in which we do not listen to several of those polite fibs which usage sanctions. For instance: "Cigars do not affect me in the least; indeed, I am quite partial to the aroma," says the white lipped girl to her gentleman friend, who smokes constantly at her side; her sufferings only equalled by those of the other girl who persists in riding with her back to the horses, and says that the motion does not affect her in the least, though knowing that many times before she had been reduced to a state of miserable sea-sickness by a similar proceeding. "Not at home to-day, John;" and the footman receives and delivers the message to visitors as unconsciously as though there were no moral wrong involved in the transaction. I recently heard an animated conversation concerning the propriety and morality of polite lying. Several, including a minister, asserted that both politeness and kindness demanded that we frequently say that which we do not mean, admire that which we do not like, assent to that with which we do not agree, and in many ways speak and act lies to avoid wounding the feelings of other people. One lady present, who immediately received the sobriquet of "Puritan," maintained that while it is not necessary to say all that we think; while we need never give adverse opinions unless positively called for; while we need not obtrude our likes and dislikes, nor express our unfavorable criticism; while, indeed, we should seek for something which we can honestly admire and praise in every one, all shams and subterfuges, all seemings that were not realities, and especially all words spoken with intent to deceive are, in plain Saxon, lies, and no amount of kindness of purpose can change their moral character. A lie is a lie—nothing more, nothing less.

"I fear," said a country curate to his flock, "when I explained to you in my last charity sermon that philanthropy was the love of our species, you must have misunderstood me to say 'specie,' which may account for the smallness of the collection. You will prove, I hope, by your present contribution that you are no longer laboring under the same mistake."

A boy was being instructed in the multiplication table by his teacher, but being unable to make him comprehend why twice one is two, she sought to enlighten him by asking him if he had a sled and his father should give him another, how many he would then have. He promptly replied, "I'd have a nice double ripper."

He drew his breath with a gasping sob, with a quivering voice he sang, but his voice leaked out and could not drown the accompanist's clamorous bang. He lost his pitch on the middle A, he faltered on lower D, and foundered at length like a battered wreck adrift on the wild, high C.—Burlington Hawkeye.

A little Boston girl called one of her dolls, a jointless creature, her "woman's rights doll." "But why do you call her so?" asked her aunt, a lecturer upon the much discussed question. "Oh, 'cause, aunt X.," the child answered, "she's just like you; she can't ever sit down and be comfortable."

A New Orleans man lately cabled to a friend in Cuba, "Send me one or two monkeys." The reply came back: "Shipped you 75; will send rest as soon as can be found." The telegram had gone: "Send me 102 monkeys." The balance of 27 have been countermanded.

Confidential friend (to elderly and not unattractive spinster)—"So, dear, you've given up advocating women's rights?" Elderly spinster—"Yes, I now go in for women's lefts." Confidential friend—"Women's lefts! What's that?" Elderly spinster—"Widowers, my dear!"

In 1879 Illinois produced one-fifth of all the corn grown in the United States, and according to the latest advices the crop of 1880 will bear about the same proportion to the corn crop of the country.

During the past four years the treasury department has paid $208,824,730 of the public debt, less cash in the treasury. The reduction during February amounted to nearly $12,000,000.

A Pennsylvania enthusiast recently arrived at Dallas, Tex., who had footed the whole distance with basket and brush, painting verses from the Bible on walls and fences en route.

GREAT MERIT.—All the fairs give the first premiums and special awards of great merit to Hop Bitters as the purest and best family medicine, and we most heartily approve of the awards, for we know they deserve it. HILL AND DRILL

PHOSPHATE.

SEND FOR PAMPHLET.

This is a bone superphosphate, and may be used on any crop, in the hill or drill or broadcast, either with or without manure, and will produce a much earlier and larger crop. In the report of the Massachusetts Inspector of Fertilizers, its valuation is from $3 to $10 per ton higher than other Phosphates which sell at the same price. The past year over 3000 tons were sold against 100 tons three years ago, showing that it is liked by the farmers. If there is no local agent near you send to us.

RUPTURE.

Wesley Phillips' Case.

DR. J. A. SHERMAN—Dear Sir: I am happy to inform you that I am entirely cured of my large scrotal rupture. It is one year ago to-day that I received your treatment. I have tested the cure by going without the appliance. My business is that of a locomotive engineer. My rupture, as you will recall to your mind, was similar to Mr. Jordan's, in your pamphlet of illustrations.

I was ruptured in the year 1863, while in the army. I have tried spring and elastic trusses with great discomfort and injury, my rupture always growing worse. Finding I must get some relief or give up my business, I determined to try you as a last resort, and I must say that I found your treatment a complete success. My improvement and cure have, considering my terrible condition, surprised my friends as well as myself. During your treatment I have worked hard in my business, enjoying both safety and comfort, and have not lost a day's work. My general health has also improved. I will take pleasure in recommending the afflicted to you whenever I have an opportunity.

You may publish this letter for the benefit of humanity. My address is 211 East 44th St. With best wishes I remain yours respectfully,

WESLEY PHILLIPS.

New York City, Oct. 25, 1880.

Its Relief and Cure as Certain as Day follows Day.

Since the reduction of Dr. Sherman's terms, thousands are crowding upon him for treatment, gladly throwing away their griping, irksome, dispiriting, and life-punishing trusses. His treatment for this affliction makes the patient comfortable and safe in the performance of every kind of exercise or labor. It is a grand thing, and those who are ruptured and do not provide themselves with it must endure the dangers of that precarious affliction and the use of trusses all through life. Thousands of those cured give the most flattering testimonials to Dr. Sherman. He is the author and inventor of his popular system; he imparts his secret to no one; it is applicable to all classes and cases, and, under his reduced rate, within the reach of every one.

Patients can receive treatment and leave for home the same day. Dr. SHERMAN'S BOOK on Rupture gives convincing proofs from professional gentlemen and others of his successful treatment. It is illustrated with photographic pictures of bad cases before cure, and is sent to those who send 10 cents. Principal office 251 Broadway, New York. Branch office 43 Milk street, Boston. Days in New York—Monday, Tuesday, Saturday; in Boston—Wednesday, Thursday and Friday. 4w49

BACK ACHE

POSITIVELY CURED BY

BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTERS.

Reasons Why they are Preferred to All Other Porous Plasters or External Remedies:

FIRST.

Because they possess all the merit of the strengthening porous plaster, and contain in addition thereto the newly discovered powerful and active vegetable combination which acts with increased rubefacient, stimulating, sedative and counter irritant effects.

SECOND.

Because they are a genuine pharmaceutical preparation, and so recognized by the profession.

THIRD.

Because they are the only plasters that relieve pain at once.

FOURTH.

Because they will positively cure diseases which other remedies will not even relieve.

FIFTH.

Because over 5000 physicians and druggists have voluntarily testified that they are superior to all other plasters or medicines for external use.

SIXTH.

Because the manufacturers have received the only medals ever given for porous plasters.

NELL'S PROMISE.

She came flying down the path, her long, straight black hair streaming behind her, her great eyes sparkling, the dark, thin, irregular features fairly alive with vivacity. She looked to the very life like the wild little creature of fifteen that she was; but into the face of the beautiful, fair-haired girl whom Nell Haviland was coming to meet there flushed such a look of love that a stranger would have known that her girlish sister was very dear to the heart of Alice Haviland.

The two were orphans, supported by the industry of Alice, the oldest, who was well known in the town as a skillful teacher of music. The younger was of entirely a different nature from the quiet, steady, lovable Alice. The townfolks said that her baptismal name of Eleanor was altogether too grand and stately for such a hoydenish creature, and so it had become shortened to the monosyllable "Nell."

"Alice," said Nell, "you cannot guess what I have done."

"Something impossible for any one else to do, I presume," said her sister, smiling into the eager eyes.

"I climbed into the old oak and tied my handkerchief to the top," said the girl, pointing triumphantly to the fluttering white morsel.

"Did you?" said Alice, absent-mindedly.

"Oh, dear!" said Nell, pettishly, "you don't hear a word I say. I guess you are thinking of Goddard Tressill. I wish you was not engaged to him, Alice, for you are a darling sister come what may," and putting her arm caressingly around Nell's waist, the sisters went into the house.

The humble supper was over. Alice was sitting at the little piano, weaving a sweet harmony from the ivory keys, when she heard a step on the walk that summoned her to the door.

"Alice!" and her hand lay in the hand of her betrothed, Goddard Tressill.

The tall, handsome young fellow that stood beside her was the heir of "The Cliffs," the great mansion, round which lay its extensive farm—"the best place in the country."

"It's too fine a night to remain indoors, Alice. What do you say to a moonlight row?"

"It would give me much pleasure," she said; and running up stairs for a shawl, she paused a moment and opened the door to Nell's chamber. The sound of her low, regular breathing satisfied her, and she went down stairs to rejoin her lover. They walked slowly down the path, drinking in the intense loveliness of the night.

The moon was at its full. Great golden stars seemed melting into blue ether, and white weird drifts like phantom fleets floated across the sky.

The calm ocean ended their walk. Each of its waves seemed tipped by a diamond crest, and the reflexes trembled in pearl and azure.

Assisting Alice into the boat, Tressill pushed out so as to clear the shore. The little skiff rocked lightly on the slow, faint swells of the out-going tide, and the oars splashed with a musical rythm very pleasant to hear. A silence fell over the two. It was broken by the voice of Tressill.

"Alice, I have something important to say to you to-nignt."

"What is it about?" she questioned, wonderingly.

"About—Nell." The words were said hesitatingly, as if he were nerving himself for an effort.

"About Nell?" she repeated in surprise.

"Yes; where is she going to live after we are married?"

"Going to live! Why, with me, of course," said Alice, wondering what would come next.

"It cannot be, Alice. She must be sent to a boarding school or somewhere."

"Why, Goddard, what put that into your mind?" exclaimed Alice. "She would not stay at a boarding school for one moment. It would kill her to separate us, for I am all she has in the world, and I promised mother when she was dying that I would never leave nor forsake the child-sister entrusted to my care."

"But, Alice, mother and Isabel said—"

"Goddard, please tell me precisely what your mother and sister have said, so that I may know how the matter stands."

"Well, they say that they can welcome you gladly as a daughter and sister, but they cannot endure the idea of having Nell under the same roof, and she must abide somewhere else."

"And you—Goddard?" said Alice, imploringly.

"What can I do, Alice?" said he, in a sort of a helpless way that struck a chill to the girl's heart.

"So it is a question of decision on my part between you and my sister Nell?"

"Yes, Alice."

Do not blame him too harshly. He had been much harassed by his proud, haughty mother and sister concerning the disagreeable subject, and man fashion he thought it could be arranged somehow, so that this troublesome Nell could be sent quietly out of the way, and he could enjoy the society of the only woman he loved in peace.

Alice fought a desperate battle between love and duty.

It seemed to her that she could not give up her betrothed for another's sake; that she could not throw away her life's happiness for her younger sister; but the stratum of loyalty to duty that ran through her nature like a silver chord, gave her strength. So it was determined, and though it was a white face that met Goddard Tressili's, it was a resolute voice that said:

"Goddard, I have chosen. I cannot leave my sister."

He tried to break this decision by passionate pleading, but the tones were firm and unshaken as she said at last:

"Goddard, it would be unjust to say that I do not love you, for you know that I do, but I cannot be false to my charge."

And they parted—he to walk home as if possessed by furies, thinking bitterly of woman's obstinacy, and yet in his secret heart honoring the girl who walked so unflinchingly in the path of duty.

Alice went up stairs, and burying her face in the soft cushions of an arm chair, with the friendly darkness around her, nature took her revenge for the self-control of the last hour. Her eyes throbbed and burned like balls of fire; her heart beat in high, surging waves, but the hand was icy cold that she placed over her mouth for fear a cry might escape her lips which would awaken Nell. But despite all her precaution there came a sound of bare feet on the floor, and a little white-robed form knelt down beside her, and the dark face with its weird eyes peered into hers.

"What's the matter, Alice?"

"Why, Nell, I thought you were asleep! Come, dear, go back to bed; you will catch cold up here."

"I don't want to go. What is the trouble, Alice?" persisted the girl.

And Alice told her all. Nell kissed her sister passionately, then, clenching her little brown fists, she said, fiercely:

"I hate those proud women! I hate Goddard Tressill! And I'll pay 'em back for what they have said, for every word!"

"Hush, dear!" and Alice dried her tears hastily. "Nell, I want you to promise me something. Will you, darling?"

"Anything!" said Nell, impetuously.

"I want you to promise me that if it ever lies in your power to do a favor for any one of the Tressill family, I may depend upon your performance of that favor."

"Oh, Alice! anything, anything but that!"

"Promise me, Nellie!" a ring of decision in her voice.

"I promise."

* * * * *

The September sun, with its ripening tints of amber, lay warm and golden on the garden, walk and terrace of the cliffs. The waves of the ocean crept softly shoreward, drifting into fantastic shapes, and then breaking, scattered the pearly spray far upon the land.

"Mother," and Isabel Tressill stopped before the open door of the pleasant sitting room; "I lost my bracelet down in the cove this afternoon, and I did not notice that it had slipped off until I got home. I must go and recover it before the tide comes in."

"Cannot Goddard go with you?" said her mother.

"I don't know where he is."

"Very well, be careful about the tide," said the mother, anxiously.

"I will be careful," said Isabel, confidently. "Adieu, ma mere."

She went down to the foot of the cliffs, which gave her home its name, by the broad, gently sloping path. Then her path lay along the sands to the cove. Two long parallel walls of rock make off from the shore, and during high tide the little cove thus formed was a mass of tossing foam, but now it was a long, narrow stretch of sand. Isabel Tressill at length reached the cove and began to search anxiously for the missing bracelet. It was a present from Goddard, and she valued it very highly. She was about giving it up for lost, when suddenly she caught sight of it, almost hidden by a mass of sea-weed.

Isabel caught the bracelet up hastily and turned to go, saying to herself: "I must hurry or be caught by the tide."

At the thought her eyes turned towards the termination of the point around which she must go. Her heart almost froze with horror at the sight that met her gaze. The waves curled at the foot of the point, soft as "carded wool."

* * * * *

"Help! help!"

The cry sounded faintly above the beating of the tide on the rocks, and reached the ear of Nell Haviland, who stood watching the waves as they slowly encroached upon the sand.

"Some one is in the cove," said the girl, and running along the edge of the cliffs she bent over the rocky precipice. She saw a woman, evidently half dead with terror, crouching at the foot of the cliff.

"She will be washed away before I can get help. I must help her myself," said Nell to herself.

There was an almost imperceptible path down the precipitous wall. Though she was as used to climbing as a goat, Nell found it was no easy task to descend. When she had nearly arrived at the base she called. "You must climb up this path; I will show you how."

The woman, who had not heard Nell before, turned at the sound of her voice, and Nell Haviland stood face to face with Isabel Tressill.

"Oh, Nell! dear Nell, save me!" she cried, clasping her hands imploringly.

A vow registered itself in Nell's soul. "I will keep my promise if I drown."

"Take hold of that little bush," she said, "and put your foot there," pointing to a little projecting stone.

Isabel's terror caused her to catch at the guiding hand instead of the seemingly insecure bush, and her excess of weight caused Nell to fall downwards. A stone dislodged struck Nell's foot, and to her dismay she found herself unable to step. She braced herself against the wall and urged remorseful Isabel to attempt to scale the cliff. She tried in vain. The unused muscles refused to perform the task given them. Then with the cold, crawling waves around them, they screamed in unison. No answer. At last, with a moan of utter despair, Isabel gave it up.

"Nell, it is of no use; we have got to drown. But I cannot, cannot die! Oh, God, have mercy!" and in an abandonment of agony, she buried her face on Nell's shoulder.

The words of a grand old hymn she had often heard Alice sing came back to Nell's mind. Nell put her arm around the trembling form of the terror-stricken woman, and then the young, strong voice sang out clear and sweet as a bugle call, flinging a grand defiance into the very face of death.

"Jesus, lover of my soul,
Let me to thy bosom fly."

The cold spray struck the brave young singer harshly in the face, as if to stop utterance, but the next second the words,

"While the billows near me roll,
While the tempest still is high," floated over the water. Strength came back to Isabel; her voice joined Nell's and steadfastly they awaited the seemingly inevitable.

"Goddard!" The anxious face of his mother startled him as he entered the hall. "Do go and look for Isabel. She went down to the cove and has not returned."

He waited to hear no more, but in a moment was running in the direction of the cove. Hark! above the roar of the surge, steady and clear sounded the death song:

"Oh, receive my soul at last."

He reached the cove and commenced descending the path at a break-neck speed as his horrified gaze discerned two women at the foot. They both looked up as he called, "Hold on for one moment."

The possibility of being saved took away Isabel Tressill's strength, and her horror-stricken brother saw her fall forward into the embrace of the foam-crested wave that just swept up. But no. The pale face of Nell Haviland gleamed from the water, and the almost exhausted voice said, "Take her quick!"

Tressill snatched the senseless form of his sister, and groaned, "Oh, God! must I leave you to be drowned, Nell?"

"You cannot take us both. Tell Alice I kept my promise," and Nell turned her face away to watch with a curious sort of expectancy the gigantic billow slowly crawling toward her. It swept over her, and then she felt herself lifted up and borne off; but to the benumbed sense of hearing it seemed as if an agonized voice called, "Nell, my darling!" and then darkness—nothingness.

Was it Providence that called Alice Haviland to the cliffs at that moment? But she bent over them just as Goddard Tressill began his ascent. What was that object buried almost in the water below him? She recognized it. Only an angel could have steadied the feet of the light figure that swung itself recklessly by Goddard Tressill and his burden. She reached the end of the path just as the wave bore away the form of her sister, and a great cry broke from her lips:

"Oh, Nell, my darling!"

The covetous waves dashed the helpless body at her feet, and then strove to bear away two victims. But the soft arms of Alice Haviland seemed to have been endowed with the strength of cast iron, for seizing Nell in a strong embrace she fought the billows until they shrank back, conquered by the power of love. Soon Goddard Tressill relieved her, and how she never knew, she reached the top of the cliffs, but when there unconsciousness overtook her.

* * * * *

Slowly Alice drifted back to life. She found herself in a large, pleasant room.

"Where am I?" she questioned feebly.

Goddard Tressill bent over her.

"You are at the Cliffs," he answered.

Recollection came back, and starting up, Alice exclaimed: "Where is Nell? I must go to her."

"She is doing well, and mother is dividing her time between Isabel and sister Nellie; that is," he added imploringly, "she will be my sister if you can ever forgive my cowardliness of three months ago."

If we failed to surmise Alice's answer, the wedding bells that rang so merrily six months afterward would have told us whether she refused to forgive him or not. And among all the kinsfolk that assembled at the Cliffs to witness the marriage of Goddard Tressill and the fair young music teacher, none were so dear to the heart of Mrs. Tressill as "daughter Nellie, who nearly lost her life to save Isabel's," and happy Nellie Haviland never regretted that she faithfully redeemed her promise.

CHURCH KENO.

While most of our traveling men, our commercial tourists, are nice Christian gentlemen, there is occasionally one that is as full of the old Nick as an egg at this time is full of malaria. There was one of them stopped at a country town a few nights ago where there was a country fair. He is a blonde, good-natured looking, seriously talking chap, and having stopped at that town every month for a dozen years, everybody knows him. He always chips in towards a collection, a wake or a rooster fight, and the town swears by him. He attended the fair, and a jolly sister of the church, a married lady, took him by the hand and led him through green fields where the girls sold him ten cent chances in sawdust dolls, and beside still waters where a girl sold him sweetened water with a sour stomach, for lemonade, from Rebecca's well. The sister finally stood beside him while the deacon was reading off numbers. They were drawing a quilt, and as the numbers were drawn it was announced that number fifteen drew the quilt, and the little sister turned to the traveling man and said, "My! that is my number. I have drawn it. What shall I do?" "Hold up your ticket and shout keno," said he. The little deaconness did not stop to think that there might be guile lurking in the traveling man, but being full of joy at drawing the quilt, and ice cream because the traveling man bought it, she rushed into the crowd toward the deacon, holding her number, and shouted, so they could hear it all over the house, "Keno!" If a bank had burst in the building there couldn't have been so much astonishment. The deacon turned pale and looked at the poor little sister as though she had fallen from grace, and all the church people looked sadly at her, while worldly minded people snickered. The little woman saw that she had got her foot into something, and she blushed and backed out, and asked the traveling man what keno meant. He said he didn't know exactly, but he had always seen people at that game yell "keno." She isn't exactly clear yet what keno is, but she says she has sworn off on taking advice from pious-looking traveling men. They call her Little Keno now.

At the last Paris exhibition considerable attention was drawn to some muslin curtains to which a flame was constantly applied without setting them on fire. The chemical composition of the substance which rendered them incombustible, as recently made known, was 80 parts pure sulphate of ammonia, 25 of carbonate of ammonia, 30 of boracic acid, 12 of pure borax, 20 of starch, and 1000 of distilled or pure water. The materials to be rendered fire-resisting are dipped in this solution while it is hot, so as to insure thorough impregnation, and when well dried are ironed as ordinary starched fabrics.

An office boy to a root-doctor relates that he was once sent into the woods to get some of the inner bark of the butternut tree. "Tom," said the doctor, as he departed, "I want you to scrape this bark downward. It is for a cathartic. Don't scrape it upward, or it will be an emetic. And whatever you do, Tom, don't scrape it both ways. If you do nobody on earth can tell how it will act."

Commenting on Dr. Gordon Holmes' advice to singers to wear flannel, a contemporary urges that in many cases the best place for it would be over the mouth and carefully doubled.

A Stolen Kiss.

I ne'er on those lips for a moment have gazed
But a thousand temptations beset me;
And I've thought as the dear little rubies you raised,
How delicious 'twould be if you'd let me.

Then be not so angry for what I have done,
Nor say you have sworn to forget me;
They were buds of temptation too pouting to shun,
And I thought that you could not but let me.

When your lips with a whisper came close to my cheek,
Oh, think how bewitching they met me;
And, plain as the eyes of a Venus could speak,
Your eyes seemed to say you would let me.

Then forgive the transgression and bid me remain,
For in truth if I go you'll regret me;
Or, oh! let me try the transgression again,
And I'll do all you wish. Will you let me?

ROCK MAPLES TO THE FRONT.

Mr. Editor:—The recent interest manifested in the preservation of our forests and the planting of shade trees in our village, emboldens me to call attention to a project which some time since occurred to me, namely, the extensive planting of Rock or Sugar Maples in our highways throughout New England, (the favorite home of the Maple).

Whatever may be said of other trees, as affording a grateful shade, beautifying the landscape, increasing and equalizing the rainfall, and utilizing the public highways, the Rock Maple possesses the additional excellence of producing sugar.

My plan would be to take these trees from the forest at a suitable age for transplanting, and set them out on the borders of highways, a row on each side, say 100 feet apart, or with space enough to allow a fair view of our beautiful New England landscapes from the road. Let them be arranged so that the trees on the two rows may not come directly opposite each other, but have the trees on either side alternate with the trees on the other side. In twenty or twenty-five years the average of these trees would be of suitable size to "tap" for sap, and meanwhile they would have answered all the other purposes of shade trees equally well or better than others.

Of course, these trees being within the limits of the highway, would be public property, and as such under the supervision of the town authorities. But it is possible that the owners of estates abutting on the highway might be enlisted in the enterprise in some such way as this: To parties who would set out young Rock Maples in the way proposed, and care for them in a manner satisfactory to the town, let the authorities aforesaid grant to them or their estates the free use of such trees for sugar making for fifty years from the time of transplanting. In this case, the public would enjoy the benefit of the shade tree, without expense, and at the end of the fifty years the possession of a very valuable wood-lot suitable for timber and fuel, on the same easy terms. On the other hand, the individual sugar maker would have easy and convenient access to his trees by team to collect the sap, (which sap would be far richer in saccharine than that obtained from forest trees), while the land previously occupied by the "sugar orchard" could be devoted to tillage, if so desired.

Wherever this plan is impracticable, let the town assume the setting out of the trees and their care, and either lease the use of them during the sugar-bearing period, or themselves take and utilize the sap. I believe most New England towns possess a poor-farm. In such cases this highway sugar orchard might be considered and treated as a part of such farm. When the trees cease to produce sap, then the wood remains. Much of this would furnish very valuable material for various articles of manufacture, and the remainder would be second to none for fuel. Let it be remembered also that not only is the sap much sweeter in these trees standing alone, but the wood is finer and tougher. The cost in any case would be trifling, probably not more than a dollar a piece, including the necessary slat frame work to protect the young trees from browsing animals. When once started, young trees may be set out from time to time in the intervening spaces, so as to be in readiness for use as the old ones decay.

To sum up, the Rock Maple is a beautiful, hardy, clean and valuable shade tree, and in addition, is especially available for sugar making. The immediate carrying out of the foregoing plan would secure in a single generation all the advantages enumerated, and would make the pure and delicious maple syrup and sugar as plenty and cheap as the comparatively dirty and gross molasses and sugar of the tropical cane. Again, when it is considered that the planting of the trees as proposed would give one hundred trees to each mile of highway, it will be seen that the growth of wood on land otherwise unimproved, would be enormous. And then it would undoubtedly visibly and favorably affect the rainfall. And all this, with the trifling first cost of setting out the trees.

If anybody thinks favorably enough of these suggestions to give the project encouragement, the writer would like to hear from him or them. F. RAND.

Medford, Mass.

A Vermont man in a sleeping car was accosted by his neighbor opposite, who was also putting on his shoes, with the inquiry: "My friend, are you a rich man?" The Vermonter looked astonished, but answered the pleasant-faced, tired-looking gentleman with a "Yes, I am tolerably rich." A pause occurred, and then came another question: "How rich are you?" He answered: "About $700,000 or $800,000. Why?" "Well," said the old man, "if I were as rich as you say you are, and snored as loud as I know you do, I would hire a whole sleeper every time I traveled."

They were watching the sea-gulls whirling in graceful circles above the waters of the bay, while the rays of the sinking sun covered the landscape with a flood of gold. Finally he turned to her, and in a voice trembling with emotion, asked: "Darling, if we were sea-gulls would you fly away with me and be at rest?" To which she answered, with her gaze fixed on a far-off mass of castellated clouds: "No, George; "I'd let you fly away, and then I'd have all the rest I wanted here."—Brooklyn Eagle.

Ladylike qualities cannot be concealed, no matter in what position she who possesses them may be placed. A Leadville lawyer was cross-examining a woman on the witness stand, and becoming somewhat abusive, she exclaimed: "I'm a lady by thunder, and don't you forget it!"

The boy who is well shingled by his parent will shed water.

A GRAIN ELEVATOR.

In order to begin at the beginning—get to the bottom, as it were, of an elevator—one must climb to the very top. The building is perhaps one hundred and fifty feet long by seventy-five feet wide, and, like all of its class, it rises eighty feet or more to the eaves, above which a narrow top part forty or fifty feet higher, is perched upon the ridge-pole. It is built of wood, sheathed with corrugated iron a little way up, and then slated the rest of the way.

Entering one end, where two railway tracks run into the building, we find a narrow wooden stairway, and begin our ascent. The flights are short ones, but eighteen are stepped over before we emerge into the topmost attic. Alongside of us, as we climbed, has been running the strong belt which carries the power from the great engine on the ground-floor to the gearing in the roof—a belt of rubber canvas four feet wide, and perhaps two hundred and fifty feet long.

When grain is bought—perhaps a hundred car-loads from the vast fields of Dakota or the wide farms between here and St. Paul—the train is backed right into the elevator, and stands so that opposite each car door is a receiver, which is a kind of vat, or hopper, in the platform. By the help of steam-shovels, operating almost automatically, two men in each car will in ten minutes or less empty the whole train.

As fast as the grain is dumped, the receiver delivers it to iron buckets holding about a peck each, which are attached to endless belts, and travel up a sort of chimney, called a "leg," to this roof chamber. These buckets will hoist 6000 bushels an hour at their ordinary rate of speed. That is equal to one bucket going up 24,000 times, at the rate of 400 miles a minute—tolerably lively work! To-day up here in the topmost loft there is nothing doing, and we are saved strangulation. The light hardly penetrates through the cobwebbed windows, and the most pulverous of dust lies everywhere half an inch deep, showing the marks of a few boot soles, many foot-prints of rats, and the lace-like tracks of hundreds of spiders and bugs. You step over and under broad horizontal belts as you make your way gingerly from one end of the attic to the other. They run the fans that winnow the grain as it comes up in the buckets, after which it is dropped into the hoppers, ten feet wide, and twich as deep, that open like hatchways every few feet in the centre of the floor. Now all is perfectly quiet; we are so high that even the clamor of the wharves does not reach us. But when the machinery starts in motion, then fearful roars, and clash of cogs, and whipping of slackened belts, assault the garret, until this whole upper region rocks like a ship in a gale, and chaff and dust cloud the eyes and stifle the throat.

Descending one story, we find another garret, with nothing in it but the square bodies of the hoppers. Going down a second flight shows us that the hoppers are suspended not upon pillars, but loosely in iron stirrups, so as to shake a little, and the iron gate which lets on or shuts off the fall of the grain through the tubular orifice at the bottom is operated by steam.

There are twelve of these hoppers. Sticking up through the floor underneath each one gape the flaring mouths of twelve spouts or sluices, all of which point directly at the gate in the hoppers, as though earnestly begging its bounty of grain. Every one of these 144 spouts leads into a bin, near or distant, and all are numbered, so that the superintendent knows which spout canducts to any one bin, and can distribute his cargoes accordingly, the result of his choice being recorded in cabalistic abbreviations upon a blackboard close by. A movable conductor is swung into place between the hopper and the spout, the gate pulled open, and down slides the wheat, with a musically rushing noise, into the grateful bin.

To see the bins we descend again, this time reaching the top of the wide part of the building. We walk very circumspectly, in the half-light, amid a maze of beams, stringers, and cross-pieces of wood and iron. The whole interior of the elevator below this level is now seen to consist of a series of rooms, between which there is no communication. They are ceilingless, and the only exit from them is through a spout in the bottom. Peering over the edges from the narrow foot-walks, we can only guess how far the person would fall who should lose his balance, for the eye cannot reach the bottom: it is sixty-five feet below, and hidden in darkness. Of these deep bins there are 144, some twice the size of others. Sometimes they are all full at once, and hold eight or nine hundred thousand bushels, weighing fifty millions of pounds, and good for over two hundred thousand barrels of flour.—Ernest Ingersoll, in Harper's Magazine for April.

LITTLE THINGS.—Springs are little things, but they are sources of large streams; a helm is a little thing but it governs the course of a ship; a bridle-bit is a little thing, but we know its use and power; nails and pegs are little, but they hold the parts of a large building together; a word, a look, a smile, a frown, are little things, but powerful for good or evil. Think of this, and mind the little things. Pay that little debt; if it is a promise, redeem it. You know not what important events may hang upon it. Keep your word sacred; keep it to the children; they will mark it sooner than any one else, and the effect will probably be as lasting as life. Mind little things.

Grip's lexicon: Economy—The art of living on nothing while doing a good business. Political economy—The art of always keeping on the right side of the party in power. Social economy—The art of living off somebody doing a good business without doing any business yourself.

The Journal.

SATURDAY, MARCH 19, 1881.

H. G. Pearson has been appointed postmaster of New York. Mr. Pearson was Mr. James's assistant, and his promotion is in harmony with civil service reform principles, while he is so well fitted for the place that nobody else was thought of for it.

The Legislature is still pegging away at Boston, and the event of the week has been the passage by the House of a prohibitory liquor bill, with the provision that the law shall be submitted to the people next November. This part of the bill is, however, pronounced unconstitutional by the committee on bills in the third reading, who hold that the Legislature must take the whole responsibility of passing its laws. This will probably kill the bill.

Senator Davis of Illinois took occasion the other day to define his position as an independent in the United States Senate, delivering a carefully written address, in which he announced that he could accept no honor from either party. This was a surprise to all, and a disappointment to the Democrats, who had planned to give him the chairmanship of the judiciary committee, to "fix" him more securely in his leaning toward their party. His platform is a very good one, if he can keep his balance on it.

Senators Dawes and Hoar have accepted an invitation from Gov. Long and a number of other prominent gentlemen to address a public meeting on the Indian question at Boston. The poor Poncas seem to be at the bottom of a good deal of commotion at the Hub. No sooner was Secretary Schurz invited to a dinner there than a counter invitation was sent to Senator Dawes, lest it should appear as though Boston were weakening on the Ponca question; and now, to clinch the matter, the above invitation has gone out. The cultured Bostonians seem to have something of boyishness still left in their make-up.

President Garfield has made his first glaring mistake by renewing the nomination of Stanley Matthews for justice of the United States Supreme Court. The feeling of disappointment with which the country received his nomination by Mr. Hayes a few weeks ago changed rapidly to one of emphatic disapproval, and it is difficult to understand why President Garfield should renew a nomination so unpopular and so inappropriate. It is to be hoped that the Senate will refuse to confirm him, but there is danger that a majority of the Senate will swallow their convictions in the matter, in order to keep on the right side of the new administration.

There was quite a lively circus in the Senate at Washington on Monday, when Senator Mahone of Virginia emerged from the uncertainty which has surrounded his probable political course, and voted with the Republicans. Senator Hill attempted to read him a lesson on his duty, and to force him into the Democratic ranks, making insinuations of treachery, but Mahone repelled the charge vigorously, and denied Hill's right to lay down rules for his conduct. Conkling and others took a hand in the debate, Senator Hoar bringing it to an end by a ringing speech in which he characterized Hill's remarks as the cracking of the slave-master's whip and an insult to the Senate, closing by welcoming Mahone as the advance courier of the new South, which is looking to the future and not the past. Senator Mahone's action gives the organization of the Senate to the Republicans.

Assassination of the Russian Emperor.

At last the Russian nihilists have accomplished their fell purpose, and Alexander II, Czar of Russia, is no more. The Emperor was returning to the Winter Palace from a review, at St. Petersburg, last Sunday afternoon, when a bomb was thrown under the carriage, the explosion shattering the rear part of the vehicle, killing two of the attendants and a passer-by, but not injuring the Czar or his companion, the Grand Duke Michael. The Czar at once alighted and stepped forward to see to the wounded of his escort, when a second bomb burst at his feet, shattering both legs below the knee and inflicting other terrible injuries. He fell, and was at once taken in a sleigh to the palace, where he lingered about an hour and a half, most of the time in an unconscious state. The assassin who threw the first bomb was arrested on the spot, but the second one escaped, though some reports say he was killed by the explosion. The bombs used were glass balls filled with nitro-glycerine.

The late Czar was born April 29, 1818, and had reigned 26 years and 11 days. Humane and generous at heart, his reign was marked by a progressive policy, and he will ever be remembered as the liberator of more than 20,000,000 serfs. He was not equal to rooting out the all-prevading corruption in official circles, and to this corruption, more than to any inclinations of his own to deal harshly with his people, is due the dissatisfaction on which the nihilists have fed, and which has resulted in his death. His son and successor, Alexander III, is 36 years of age, and is generally beloved by his subjects. He is credited with more liberal instincts than his father, and the people look hopefully to him for the reforms denied them by the late Czar, but the assassin's bombs will hardly hasten any concessions he might feel inclined to grant.

R. L. Lindsey, a well-known St. Louis lawyer, has been arrested, with several accomplices in different cities, on the charge of conspiracy to defraud the government out of lands by uttering false deeds under fraudulent titles. Vennor prophesied snow storms on the 16th and 17th, and on the 20th or 21st, "one of which is likely to be the heaviest fall of the season." As we had none on the 16th or 17th, we may expect a rattling storm next week, if Vennor is as well posted as he thinks for.

On dit that a certain lady in this village became so absorbed in her companion's conversation while taking a walk the other evening, that when she got home and found herself hatless she hadn't the slightest idea what had became of it, although it was quite a heavy one, as hats go. It was subsequently picked up on the sidewalk and returned by a friend.

When she asked the gentlemanly young clerk in one of our stores the other day if he had "abominable" corsets, he politely allowed that, while they kept none but the most desirable and popular kinds, still in his own opinion all corsets were simply and wholly abominable. She gave him one withering glance, and flaunted out in high dudgeon, leaving him gazing after her in blank astonishment for some time, before it dawned upon his mind that she wanted the "abdominal" article.

The closing exercises of the high school last week Friday afternoon passed off very pleasantly and satisfactorily to all present. Rev. C. H. Eaton, O. P. Allen, Mrs. Willis, Mrs. Dewey and Mrs. Moore were chosen a committee to award the prizes offered by Principal Whiting for the best recitations, and they were distributed as follows: First prize, Longfellow's Poems, Minnie Baker; second, Macaulay's History of England, Cora Brown; third, Cecil's Natural History, Effie Shaw. The declamations of Paschal Lord and Julian Tuthill were finely given, and other of the scholars did their work in a notably good manner.

The project of a railroad from this place to Southbridge is again revived by the announcement of President Wilson, of the New York and New England road, that among their plans for future expansion is the extending of their Southbridge branch either to Palmer or North Brookfield. If they come here they will connect with the New London Northern Railroad, while at North Brookfield they would connect with the Massachusetts Central. But by extending their line to this place they could easily kill both birds with one stone, as the building of about three miles of road from this place to Bondville would give them connection with both roads, and also add two thriving manufacturing villages to their stations.

THE FARMERS' MEETING.

The farmers' institute at Weeks Hall on Tuesday was the most interesting, and called out the largest attendance of any in the series. The day was mostly occupied by Secretary Russell, of the Board of Agriculture, and Mr. Bowditch of Framingham, both of whom made interesting addresses and answered numerous questions. Secretary Russell spoke of the beneficial influences upon farmers of these institutes, alluded to the great progress which had been made in farming in the last 40 years, and claimed that with the existing facilities for moving crops the farmers in New England are as well fixed, on the whole, as those in the West, while he considers the 44,000 families of farmers in this State better off than the same number in any other country under the sun. He advocated raising more sheep and fewer dogs, or else educating the two to live together in peace. In breeding stock, he would have none but thorough bred sires used. His remarks were enlivened by witty anecdotes and allusions, which kept his hearers in good humor and held their close attention.

Mr. Bowditch gave his experience in raising corn and stock, and said that last season he planted 17½ acres of corn at a cost of 32 cents a bushel, cultivating with a horse and harrow, or cultivator. He cultivates until the corn is well advanced, to keep back the weeds, and to limit the spreading of the corn roots, finding that this tends to increase the production. As to feeding, he advocates two meals a day, beginning with the coarser feed and ending with meal and roots, taking about two hours and a half each time. His cattle thrive well on this system, and he gets more milk from his cows than in any other way. Remarks were also made by C. L. Buell of Ludlow, Dr. H. P. Wakefield, and others. It has been decided to hold an institute at Hampden some time next month, to discuss the creamery, and Major Alvord of Easthampton will be present to talk on cooperative butter making.

TOWN AFFAIRS.

Remember that this year a "Yes" vote on the liquor question means license.

It is reported that some of the liquor dealers are indifferent as to whether the town votes for or against license, feeling that it is not likely to make much difference with their business either way. Then why not try no license for a year, and see how it works?

Mr. Fullerton seems likely to be re-elected on the school committee without any serious opposition, though some of the Thorndike people would like to put Rev. C. H. Ricketts on the board. Considerable fault is found at one time and another with some of the doings of the committee, and there is a feeling in some quarters that it would be a good thing to increase the committee to five or perhaps more; but there is probably not enough of this feeling to crystallize into any action.

We trust the voters will see the wisdom of adopting some new method of taking care of our highways. Under the present system we go on spending money from year to year in making the same repairs over and over again, without the least bit of permanent improvement. The $1000 appropriated last year for hardening roads was not expended because the selectmen could not agree on the best places for using it, and there is likely to be the same difficulty in the future. Many towns find that by putting their highways under the care of one or more competent road commissioners they get better roads for less money, and the plan is certainly worth trying in this town. The horses at the town farm might be used to advantage in working on the roads a part of the time.

There is a good deal of important work mapped out in the warrant for the meeting next Monday. It is for the interest of every citizen that this work shall be done carefully and well, and in no way is this as likely to be brought about as by adjourning the consideration of business matters to a subsequent meeting. It is simply impossible to give proper attention to the different questions coming before the meeting while the voting is going on and people are constantly moving about. All concede this, who have given the subject any thought, and if the voters will once try the plan of putting over the business matters to an adjourned meeting, we are confident that they will be too well satisfied with the result to ever return to the present plan of mixing up an election with a business meeting.

Candidates for the office of selectman are multiplying rapidly, and if the town does not elect a good board, it will not be from lack of material. The suggestion of H. G. Loomis of this village for a place on the board is received with a good deal of favor, and his name is likely to appear on the successful ticket. We understand that Mr. Kerigan has reconsidered his intention not to run again, and most of the tickets will bear his name. The name of E. G. Murdock is spoken of as likely to appear on one ticket with those of Messrs. Kerigan and Loomis. Lawyer Strong is understood to be ambitious to add the title of selectman to his name, in addition to the school committeeship he already holds, and a ticket will probably be brought out with his name and those of Messrs. Murdock and Kerigan at the head. Another ticket suggested as among the possibilities has the names of Enos Calkins, J. A. Squier and Jeremiah Dutton for selectmen; and among other persons suggested are David Knox, H. McMaster, George Mooers and J. O. Hamilton. These names furnish a list from which it will be an easy matter to make up a strong and able board, and again we express the hope that the voters will go for "the best."

The school committee report the schools in town in good condition generally. The number of schools is now 25, and during the past year something has been done in the way of furnishing the rooms with globes, charts, dictionaries, etc., though much more remains to be accomplished in this line to bring our school rooms up to those in other towns of equal importance. The expenses for the year have been $13,719, divided as follows: Teachers, $7983; fuel, $564; care of houses, $305; general repairs, $1324; miscellaneous contingencies, $1454; new house at Thorndike, $2033; repairs on Mason house, $54. The committee recommend the following appropriations: Teachers, fuel, and care of houses, $9500; general repairs, $500; contingent expenses, $1000. The number of scholars between 5 and 15, May 1, 1880, was 1096; enrolled during the year, 1119; average membership, 872; average attendance, 769. In the different villages the figures were as follows:

	Palmer.	Three Rivers.	Thorndike.	Bondville.
Enrolled number,	230	304	257	191
Average membership,	200	194	211	168
" attendance,	171	185	192	151

C. Merrill, principal of the high school, is spending his vacation at Garden City, Long Island. While there he is to deliver a course of six lectures on Roman Customs and Arts, at Cathedral College, it being the same course he delivered last year while he was professor of mathematics in the institution.

The closing exercises of the Ware high school for the Winter term took place last week Friday. The morning session was attended by all of the committee and others, the exercises being confined to recitations in algebra, Cicero, and Latin reader. The classes were well prepared to give clear and concise recitations. In the afternoon there were a few recitations, among them the first class in Virgil, which showed that they had closely applied themselves to study this term. The remainder of the day was then filled up with declamations, recitations of a highly interesting character, and all were finely rendered. Miss Ida Naylor of the senior class was presented with a fine bouquet from her classmates. Mr. Merrill, the principal, and Miss Wood, the assistant, were both presented with fine floral tributes, as tokens of their pupils' appreciation of their labors for their advancement. The exercises were interspersed with singing by the school, under the direction of Mr. Anderson.

The 10 o'clock train south from Ware Wednesday morning met with a serious accident in the vicinity of Gibbs' crossing. Engineer Adams felt a sudden jerk, and shutting off steam he looked around to see the freight cars leaving the track in every direction. The two cars next to the locomotive kept the track, but the ten cars following left the rails and were piled up promiscuously, while the baggage and passenger cars remained on the track. Fortunately nobody was injured, though some of the passengers were considerably frightened. The track was torn up for quite a distance, but the cars were not badly smashed, and the injury to the freight was slight. About a hundred cans of milk in the milk car were spilled, but a box of eggs went through all right. The passengers were taken into the freight cars attached to the engine, and reached Palmer in season to make connections. The wrecking train was soon on hand, and the track was cleared about midnight. The freight was removed from the cars the next day, and the cars will be taken away on Sunday. The cause of the accident is unknown.

The official reports of the town are completed, and will be ready for the voters at the town meeting Monday. The expenditures of the town the past year have been $1400 less than the appropriations, and there is due from the State about $1300 more. The present debt of the town, less the resources, is $43,470.19. The net expenses of the poor farm were $931.79; the average weekly cost of inmates $1.75, the expenses of poor away from farm including the salaries of the overseers, $1377.01. The overseers report about $1200 due from the State on small pox account. The expenses for schools the past year have been, for teachers' salaries, $6645.17; care of rooms, $304.60; fuel, $415 72; a total of $7365.49; and the incidental account amounted to $944.08.

Dated Jan. 31, 1881. His PETER ⋈ VERRAN. mark.

SUGGESTED ON NEW YEAR'S DAY BY THE DEATH OF OUR MOTHER.

'Twas New Year's, and bright the sun
Shone o'er the cold snow-mantled earth,
And many hearts with joy elate,
Were welcoming its gladsome birth.

But in our band the mirth and song
Were silenced, for there death had come
And stricken out the Central Light—
Our Mother loved—the joy of home.

The mother whom we loved in youth,
And cherished till maturer years,
Who shared our sorrows and our joys—
Who even wiped our falling tears.

Her Christmas greetings joined with ours
On Christmas morn with joy and cheer;
But silent was that voice in death
The morning of the glad New Year.

Vainly we tried to catch again
Some tones from those silent lips,
Some recognition from the eyes
Which curtained were by death's eclipse.

Though three score years and ten had passed,
Lightly their touch had marked her brow;
It seemed to us she ne'er in life
More needed was, more loved than now.

But unexpected came the call,
And darkened suddenly the home
Where tender welcomings of love
Have to us each so long been shown;

Where our reunions have so oft
Occasions been with joy replete,
Where tender ministries of love
We've never failed from her to meet.

Oh! we will miss thee, Mother loved,
The morning hours, the noon and night,
When Summer flowers renew their bloom,
And seasons speed their onward flight.

But, Mother, in our hearts enshrined
Shall live thy memory evermore,
Thy love shall be our beacon light,
Our guiding star to yonder shore.

Oh, beautiful the time indeed
Thy heavenly summoning to hear,
To enter thy eternal rest
The morning of the glad New Year.

"A Happy New Year" then to thee,
Dear Mother, in thy radiant home,
"Happy New Year" with loved ones there,
Where separations are unknown.

NIGHT LIFE OF YOUNG MEN.

One night often destroys a whole life. The leakage of the night keeps the day forever empty. Night is sin's harvest time. More sin and crime are committed in one night than in all the days of the week. This is more emphatically true of the city than of the country. The street lamps, like a file of soldiers, with torch in hand, stretch away in long lines on either sidewalk; the gay-colored transparencies are ablaze with attractions; the saloons and billiard halls are brilliantly illuminated; music sends forth its enchantment; the gay company begin to gather to the haunts and houses of pleasure; the gambling dens are aflame with palatial splendor; the theatres are wide open; the mills of destruction are grinding health, honor, happiness, hope, out of thousands of lives. The city under the gaslight is not the same as under God's sunlight. The allurements and perils and pitfalls of night are a hundredfold deeper and darker and more destructive. Night life in our cities is a dark problem, whose dark depths and abysses and whirlpools make us start back with horror. All night long tears are falling, blood is streaming. Young men, tell me how and where you spend your evenings, and I will write out the chart of your character and life destiny, with blanks to insert your names. It seems to me an appropriate text would be, "Watchman, what of the night?" Policemen pacing the beat, what of the night? What are the young men of the city doing at night? Where do they spend their evenings? Who are their associates? What are their habits? Where do they go in? What time do you see them come out? Policemen, would the night life of young men commend them to their employers? Would it be to their credit? Make a record of the nights of one week. Put in the morning paper the names of all the young men, their habits and haunts, that are on the streets for sinful pleasure. Would there be shame and confusion? Some would not dare to go to their places of business; some would leave the city; some would commit suicide. Remember, young men, that in the retina of the all-seeing Eye there is nothing hid but shall be revealed.—Baptist Weekly.

A brave boy who kept twenty Indians at bay died of his wounds at Denver, Col., a few days ago. It never happens that way in a dime novel of Indian warfare. The brave boy, in the dime novel, would have kept twenty Indians at bay until there was not an Indian left to bay at him, and then he would have rescued and married a beautiful white captive, with long hair kissed by the sunlight, ripe red lips, eyes of diamonds, a marble brow, and a good-natured father worth $900,000. There is too much reality in the real.—Norristown Herald.

An exchange prints an article headed "How Oilcloth is Made." We have read it through carefully, but have hailed to find the information we seek, which is how oilcloth is always made so allfired cold?—Rome Sentinel.

Solid truth from an exchange: "Papa, how do editors get in free at all the shows?" "Well, my boy, they generally give five dollars' worth of advertising for a twenty-five cent ticket."

Before we decide whether drunkenness is a vice or an amiable weakness, we want to know whether the drunkard is a man of property or a tramp.—Boston Post.

The Philadelphia News thinks it strange that the man who first invented sleep did not extend the invention to babies.

A LADY'S WISH.—"Oh, how I do wish my skin was as clear and soft as yours," said a lady to her friend. "You can easily make it so," answered the friend. "How?" inquired the first lady. "By using Hop Bitters, that makes pure rich blood and blooming health. It did it for me, as you observe.'

A nourishing agent for the weak, emaciated and dropsical—Malt Bitters.

WILL IT CURE ME?

Said a man whose woebegone countenance and broken down constitution plainly showed traces of disease—a sufferer with Nervous Dyspepsia, in whose stomach the most delicate morsel lay like lead. Refreshing sleep and quiet nerves were strangers to him, and he despaired of ever being well.

We advised him to take

Simmons Liver Regulator,

which he did, and in a short time was not only relieved but cured.

Reader, if you are suffering with Dyspepsia or Liver Disease in any form, do not wait until the disease has taken a fast hold upon you, but use the Regulator when the symptoms first show themselves. It has relieved untold suffering. SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR is not an alcoholic stimulant, but a PURELY VEGETABLE REMEDY that will cure when everything else fails. It is a faultless family medicine. Does not disarrange the system. Is no violent drastic purge, but nature's own remedy. The friend of everyone, and will not disappoint you. A single trial will convince you that it is the cheapest, purest and best Family Medicine in the world.

ASK the recovered dyspeptics, bilious sufferers, victims of fever and ague, the mercurial diseased patient how they recovered their health, cheerful spirits and good appetite--they will tell you by taking Simmons Liver regulator.

TESTIMONIALS.

Westboro, Jan, 25. 1881.

Willard's Patent Truss seems to possess some principles of mechanism well calculated to reach a large number of cases of Hernia hitherto uncontrolled by instruments in common use. Persons so afflicted and disappointed can safely rely on the integrity of Mr. Streeter, the agent, in his guarantee of perfect success. WM. CURTIS, M. D.

Worcester, Dec. 24, 1880.

I have seen the working of Willard's Truss among my patients. I think it a superior instrument, and well calculated mechanically to answer its purpose. It embraces some new principles, and it is worn with ease and confidence by all I know who use it. RUFUS WOODWARD.

I am pleased to add my testimony to the utility, simplicity, and apparently perfect adaptation of the truss manufactured by Mr. Geo. A. Willard of this city. J. N. BATES, M. D.

RUPTURE.

Wesley Phillips' Case.

DR. J. A. SHERMAN—Dear Sir: I am happy to inform you that I am entirely cured of my large scrotal rupture. It is one year ago to-day that I received your treatment. I have tested the cure by going without the appliance. My business is that of a locomotive engineer. My rupture, as you will recall to your mind, was similar to Mr. Jordan's, in your pamphlet of illustrations.

I was ruptured in the year 1863, while in the army. I have tried spring andelastic trusses with great discomfort and injury, my rupture always growing worse. Finding I must get some relief or give up my business, I determined to try you as a last resort, and I must say that I found your treatment a complete success. My improvement and cure have, considering my terrible condition, surprised my friends as well as myself. During your treatment I have worked hard in my business, enjoying both safety and comfort, and have not lost a day's work. My general health has also improved. I will take pleasure in recommending the afflicted to you whenever I have an opportunity.

You may publish this letter for the benefit of humanity. My address is 211 East 44th St. With best wishes I remain yours respectfully,

WESLEY PHILLIPS.

New York City, Oct. 25, 1880.

Its Relief and Cure as Certain as Day follows Day.

Since the reduction of Dr. Sherman's terms, thousands are crowding upon him for treatment, gladly throwing away their griping, irksome, dispiriting, and life-punishing trusses. His treatment for this affliction makes the patient comfortable and safe in the performance of every kind of exercise or labor. It is a grand thing, and those who are ruptured and do not provide themselves with it must endure the dangers of that precarious affliction and the use of trusses all through life. Thousands of those cured give the most flattering testimonials to Dr. Sherman. He is the author and inventor of his popular system; he imparts his secret to no one; it is applicable to all classes and cases, and, under his reduced rate, within the reach of every one.

Patients can receive treatment and leave for home the same day. Dr. SHERMAN'S BOOK on Rupture gives convincing proofs from professional gentlemen and others of his successful treatment. It is illustrated with photographic pictures of bad cases before cure, and is sent to those who send 10 cents. Principal office 251 Broadway, New York. Branch office 43 Milk street, Boston. Days in New York—Monday, Tuesday, Saturday; in Boston—Wednesday, Thursday and Friday. 4w49

THIRD.

Because they are the only plasters that relieve pain at once.

FOURTH.

Because they will positively cure diseases which other remedies will not even relieve.

Our First Gray Hair.

As the first big pattering drops that fall
With a splash on our lattice pane,
Make us shiver and start as they warn us all
Of a storm or of coming rain—
So it is with life, when we are growing old,
And age steals unaware,
We shiver and start if the truth were told,
At the sight of our first gray hair.

We mark not the light of our noonday hours,
Like the first streaks dawn doth bring;
We hail not the birth of the summer flowers
As we do the first snow-drops of Spring;
On the bleak Winter wind we look not with grief,
Though it howl through the branches bare,
But we sigh when we witness the brown autumn leaf,
And behold nature's first gray hair.

Gray hairs may come when the beaming eye
Has none of its brightness lost,
When with bouyant heart we would fain deny
Youth's Rubicon has been crossed;
But the ivy-clad tree looks young and green,
Though a sapless trunk may be there,
And naught of decay on our cheeks may be seen
When we witness our first gray hair.

Come early, come late, like a thief at the gate,
Is that first soft silvery thread,
And it joins with its silence the years that await,
With the years forever fled;
It silently tells us we're journeying on—
It silently questions us Where?
Oh! a faithful milestone, were the truth but known,
Is seen in our first gray hair.

NANNIE.

I cannot set down in so many words just when or how it came to be understood between my partner, John Stillman, and myself, that I was to marry his daughter, Nannie, when she was old enough. I have a vague impression that she was in long clothes at the time we first talked of it.

Her mother died when she was a little girl, and old Mrs. Stillman took her home to the family house at Owl's Corner, one of the prettiest little villages I ever had the good fortune to see. But Nannie was eighteen when I first met her, a woman, and this was the scene of our meeting.

John had sent for me to come to Owl's Corner on a certain July day, promising to drive over to the station and meet me, as my elderly legs covered the ground but slowly. We had retired from business, rich men both, some five years before, and corresponded regularly. But I had been abroad, and this was my first visit to Owl's Corner in ten years. I remembered Nannie as a romping child, fond of swinging on the gates, climbing up grape arbors and imperiling her neck fifty times a day, John always saying on such occasions:

"She's a little wild, but she'll get over that."

I waited at the station for half an hour; then seeing no sign of John, I started to walk to the house. It was mid-day and fearfully hot, and when I had accomplished but half the distance I turned off the road and started through a grove that gave me a longer walk, but thick shade. I was resting there on a broad stone, completely hidden by the bushes on every side, when I heard John's voice:

"Where have you been?"

There was such dismay and astonishment in the voice that I looked up in surprise, to find that he was not greeting me, but a tall, slender girl coming towards him. Such a sight! She was dark and beautiful, dressed in a thin dress of rose pink, faultless above the waist and throat, but from the waist down clinging to her, one mass of the greenest, blackest, thickest mud and water.

"In the duck pond," she answered, with a voice as clear and musical as a chime of bells. "Don't come near me."

"You are enough to wear a man into his grave!"

"There, don't scold," was the coaxing reply; "little Bob Ryan fell in face down. It did not make any material difference in his costume, but I was afraid he would smother, so I waded in after him. The water is not over two feet deep, but the mud goes clear through to China, I imagine. It is rather a pity about my new dress, isn't it!"

"A pity," roared John; "you'll come to an end some day with your freaks. As if there was nobody to pick an Irish brat out of a duck pond but you!"

"There actually was nobody else about. There, now, don't be angry. I'll go up to the house and put on that bewitching white affair that came from New York last week, and be all ready to drive over to the station with you, at what time?"

"About three; Lawrence is coming on the 2:10."

And I had come on the 12:10. This accounted for the failure to meet me. I kept snug in my retreat until John and Nannie were well on the way homeward, wondering a little how many young ladies in my circle of friends would have so recklessly sacrificed a new dress to pick up a beggar's brat out of the mud.

When I, in my turn, reached the house, John was on the porch waiting for Nannie's re-appearance. He gave me a most cordial welcome, ordered a luncheon, called Nannie and his mother, and a man to go for my trunk, all in one breath, and seemed really rejoiced to see me.

Presently a slender girl with a truly "bewitching" white dress trimmed with dashes of scarlet ribbon, and smoothly braided black hair tied with scarlet bows, came demurely into the room, and was introduced. Never, however, in that first hour, could the wildest imagination have pictured Nannie Stillman wading into the duck pond. But the half shy, half dignified company manner soon wore away, and Nannie and I were fast friends before dinner. She sang for me in a voice as deliciously fresh as a bird's carol; she took me to see her pets, the new horse that was her last gift from "papa", the ugly little Scotch terrier with the beautiful brown eyes, the rabbits, Guinea hens, and the superannuated old pony, who had preceded the new horse.

In a week I was as much in love as ever John could have desired. Nannie was the most bewitching maiden I had ever met, child-like and yet womanly, frank, bright and full of girlish freaks and boyish mischief, and yet well educated, with really wonderful musical gifts, and full of noble thoughts. She was a perfect idol in the village, her neighbors thinking no party complete without her, while the poor fairly worshipped her.

John allowed her an almost unlimited supply of pocket money, and she was lavish in all charity, from blankets for old women and tobacco for old men, to candies for children, and rides on her horse for the urchins. And she had a way of conferring favors that never wounded the pride of the most sensitive.

We rode together every morning, we walked in the cool evening hours, we spent much time at the piano, and discussed our favorite authors, and one day, when I asked Nannie to be my wife, she said coolly:

"Why, of course, I thought that was all understood, long ago!"

I was rather amazed at such matter-of-fact wooing, but delighted at the result. How could I expect any soft, blushing speeches? I suppose I ranked just where John and Nannie's grandmother did in her affections.

But one morning when Mrs. Stillman was snipping her geraniums in the sitting-room, and John was reading the morning newspapers, Nannie burst in, her beautiful face all aglow, her eyes bright with delight, crying:

"Oh, Grandma! Walt has come! I saw him from my window riding up the road."

She was going then, just as John exclaimed:

"Confound Walt!"

"Who is Walt?" I naturally inquired.

"Walter Bruce, the son of one of our neighbors. He has been like a brother to Nannie all her life, but went off to Europe two years ago, when he came of age. They wanted to correspond, but I forbade that." It was evident that John was terribly vexed, and I soon shared his annoyance. Walt, a tall, handsome young fellow, not spoiled by travel, just haunted the house.

He was generally off with Nannie as soon as he arrived, and blind to Mrs. Stillman's ill-concealed coldness, and John's sarcastic speeches about boys and puppies.

As for me, by the time my sleepy eyes were open in the morning, Nannie had taken a long ride with Walt, was at the piano when I came into the room, and Walt was walking beside Nannie when the hour for our usual stroll arrived.

And the very demon of mischief possessed the girl. There was no freak she was not inventing to imperil her life, riding, driving, boating; and I fairly shivered sometimes at the prospect of my nervous terrors when it would be my task to try and control this quicksilver temperament.

But one day when I was in the summer-house, a very rueful little maiden, with a tear-stained face, came to my side.

"Walt is going away!" she said.

"Indeed!"

"Yes, and he says I'm a wicked flirt!" with a choking sob; "I thought I would ask you about it."

"About what?"

"Our getting married. You know papa told me I was to marry you ages and ages ago?"

"Yes."

"And I knew it was all right if he said so. But Walt says you must be a muff if you want a wife who is all the time thinking of somebody else. And you know I can't help it. Walt has been my friend ever since we were little, and we were always together. And when he was in Europe papa wouldn't let us write to each other, but I kissed his picture every night and morning, and wore his hair in a locket, and thought of him all the time. And he says you won't like it after we are married."

"Well, not exactly," I said, dryly. "You'll have to stop thinking of him then."

"I don't believe I ever can. And so I thought I'd tell you, and perhaps—perhaps you will tell papa we don't care about being married after all. I don't think I could ever be sedate and grave like an old lady, and of course I ought to be if I am to be an old man's wife."

"Of course."

"And I am so rude and horrid, I know I am not nice like city girls, and I am altogether hateful, but Walt don't care."

I rather agreed with Walt as she stood in shy confusion before me, her eyes still misty, her sweet lips quivering. It was a sore wrench to give her up, but I was not quite an idiot, and said, gravely:

"But your father?"

"Yes, I know; he'll make a real storm. But then his storms don't last long, and maybe you would tell him that you have changed your mind. You have, haven't you?"

"Yes; the last half hour has quite changed my matrimonial views."

I could not help smiling, and the next moment two arms encircled my neck, and Nannie cried:

"You are a perfect darling, a perfect darling, and I shall love you dearly all my life."

So when I lost her love I gained it. She flitted away presently, and I gave myself a good mental shaking up, and concluded my fool's paradise would soon have vanished if I had undertaken to make an "old lady" out of Nannie.

John's wrath was loud and violent. He exhausted all the vituperative language in the dictionary, and then sat down panting, but furious.

"Come, now," I said; "what's the objection to young Bruce? Is he poor?"

"No, confound him! He inherits his grandfather's property, besides what his father will probably leave him."

"Is he immoral?"

"I never heard so."

"What does ail him then?"

"Nothing; but I have set my heart on Nannie's marrying you."

"Well, you see, she has set her heart in another direction, and I strongly object to a wife who is in love with somebody else."

"What on earth sent the puppy home?"

"Love for Nannie, I imagine. Come, John, you won't be my father-in-law, for I will not marry Nannie if you are ever so tyrannical; but we can jog along as usual, the best of friends—look!"

I pointed out of the window as I spoke. On the garden walk, shaded by a great oak tree, Walter Bruce stood looking down at Nannie with love-lighted eyes. Her beautiful face, all dimpled with smiles and blushes, was lifted up to meet his gaze, and both her little hands were fast prisoners in his strong ones.

John looked. His face softened, his eyes grew misty, and presently he said:

"How happy she is, Lawrence."

"And we will not cloud her happiness, John," I answered. "This is right and fitting. Nannie is too bright a May flower to be wilted by being tied up to an old December log like me."

So when, half fearful, the lovers came in, they met only words of affection, and Nannie's face lost nothing of its sunshine.

She was the loveliest of brides a few months later, and wore the diamond parure I had ordered for my bride, at her wedding. And she is the most charming matron imaginable, with all her odd freaks merged into sunshiny cheerfulness, and her husband is a proud, happy man, while I am Uncle Lawrence to the children, and the warm friend to the whole family.

If everybody would tell everybody just what they really thought of everybody, everybody would think but little of everybody.

HOW TO RUN A HOT-BED.

It is not near the work, nor is there half the risk in taking care of a hot-bed in April that there is in February and March. A little bottom heat and a little protection is all that is needed during that month for growing strong, healthy plants, and such as will be amply large for transplanting by the time the air and earth outside become suited to their growth. A well-made and well-kept hot-bed will in six weeks' time grow any of the plants required in the farmer's kitchen garden, and except in the Southern portion of New England, the last of May is quite as early as it is usually safe to put tender plants out in the open ground. It is a very simple thing to make and keep a hot-bed, when a few of the first principles are understood. Many seem to suppose that glass is the main thing; that it in some way "draws" the sun; but we must have heat in a "hot-bed" even when the sun is obscured by clouds. The heat of a good hot-bed, one that is warm by night and through cloudy or stormy days, must come from fermenting manure. Horse manure, either clear or mixed, is the best. It should be heaped up and worked over till it is alive with fermentation, then drawn to the bed which may be made either wholly above or partly under the surface. If the soil is light and dry, we prefer to sink it one or two feet, but if cold and wet the manure must be kept above it, or the cold water will "put out" all the fire.

A stronger and more steady uniform heat can be maintained by placing the manure at least two feet deep in the bed, but a foot will probably afford heat enough for starting potatoes and other hardy plants. Over the manure should be spread from four to six inches of good garden soil, which should be as free from weed seeds as possible. The deeper the manure and the stronger the heat the more soil will be required, for if the surface earth is shallow the heat from below with the sun above will dry it out so rapidly as to endanger the seeds and plants. A well-made hot-bed needs very little watering. Potatoes, peppers, tomatoes, lettuce, and some other vegetables do well in hot-beds, but the sashes must be raised for ventilation every warm day, or the sun will scald the plants to death. It is quite a trade to learn how to take good care of plants under glass, and one that can be learned thoroughly only by practice, but it is a trade well worth learning by every farmer's son.—New England Farmer.

A COUNTY WITHOUT A DRAMSHOP.

The inhabitants of Edward County, Illinois, do not support any temperance lecturers, or spend their time talking about temperance. They decided twenty-five years ago that no liquor should be sold in the county, and since that time they have sent but one person to the penitentiary, and he committed a crime while drunk with whisky procured in an adjoining county; they support but two or three paupers and their jail is empty most of the time. Their taxes are thirty-two per cent lower than the adjoining counties, and their terms of court occupy but three days in the year, while their tax rolls show that they return more property than any other county in the State of equal population.

This is a case where the minority can not complain of any invasion of private rights, for the people are unanimously opposed to license under any circumstances. Families seek the locality as a good place to bring up children. When confronted with the statistics of this model county, even old topers admit there is something in it; but it evidently is not whisky.

A TEUTONIC ARGUMENT.

In the Legislature of Ohio, some years ago, there was a warm dispute whether a certain proposed railroad should commence at a given point down or at a certain other up the river. "Who ever heard," said a down-the-river advocate, "of beginning anything at the top? Who ever heard of building a chimney from the top downward?"

Up jumped a Dutch member from an up-the-river county. "Meester Brezident, de jentlemans zay dat dees beeznes ees all von hoomboog, pecause vee vants to pegeen our railroat mit de top ov de Shtate, und he make some seely combarisons apout de houze und de schimney. I veel also ask de jentlemans von questions. Een hees bart ov de Shtate, ven dey pegins to built von vell, do dey pegins mit de top ov de vell? Veel de gentlemans bleese answer me dat leetle von question?"

The laughter which explosively followed this Teutonic retort showed who, in the opinion of the legislators, had the better of the argument.—Harper's for April.

The following story of a toad is told: "A rattlesnake never bites anything it swallows, and so it will cram a toad down its throat whole. I once saw a rattlesnake about six feet long trying to capture a large toad. The toad adopted a novel method to thwart the reptile's intentions. The snake had come upon the toad unawares, and it could not turn tail and jump, else the snake would spring and catch it in his jaws. So the toad took up a small stick, about six inches long, holding it at the centre of its mouth. The snake's mouth could not be distended to a width of six inches, and so, facing the snake with the stick in its mouth, the toad wearied its would-be destroyer out of all patience, and finally he gave up his efforts and crawled away. The toad dropped the stick and hopped to a safer retreat."

A correspondent of the Scientific American says: "Let any one who has an attack of lock-jaw take a small quantity of turpentine, warm it and pour it on the wound, no matter where the wound is, and relief will follow in less then a minute. Nothing better can be applied to a severe cut than cold turpentine; it will give certain relief almost instantly. Turpentine is also a sovereign remedy for croup. Saturate a piece of flannel with it and place the flannel on the throat and chest, and in every case three or four drops on a lump of sugar may be taken inwardly."

A young lady was caressing a pretty spaniel and murmuring: "I do love a nice dog!" "Ah!" sighed a dandy, standing near, "I would I were a dog." "Never mind," retorted the young lady, sharply; "You'll grow."

"Colonel," said a man who wanted to make out a genealogical tree,—"Colonel, how can I become thoroughly acquainted with my family history?" "Simply by running for office," answered the Colonel.

A cheerful face is nearly as good for an invalid as healthy weather.

Feast—"In Mente."

While flying snow, without the door,
Unpleasant made the day,
I sat and planned a toothsome feast,
To pass the time away.
In thoughts, I drew a table out,
Of juglans, nigra made,
And o'er, a cloth, Gossypium
Herbaceum, I laid.

A gallinaceous stew I brought,
And close beside the stew
Solanum tuberosas sat,
As good as ever grew;
And brassica oleracea,
With brassica-napus, sweet,
Nasturtium armoracia,
Whose strength could not be beet.

And thea viridis, coffea arabica,
Each made as cooks have said,
And triticum vulgare bread
With oleomargarine spread.
Then last I made a rich bouquet,
To place where all could see,
Of brightest lilliaceae,
And sweet rosaceae. N. J. WEST.

A VALUABLE DISCOVERY.

About a week ago Mr. George Crumble, a suburban resident of Cleveland, discovered that the water of his well had a peculiar taste.

"This is undoubtedly sulphur water."

"I wouldn't be surprised," replied Mrs. Crumble, "for you know that father found a sulphur well on his place once."

"Now, here, Mary, if you are going to express an opinion, express a sensible one. Do you suppose that, because your father found a sulphur well on his place, that all of his children are likely to find sulphur wells? Don't let anybody hear you talk that way. They'd go away and say that I'd found a sulphur well simply because your father once found one."

"I was just agreeing with you. But Uncle James discovered a sulphur well, and—"

"That'll do. I don't care anything about your Uncle James; but I believe that we have a genuine sulphur well."

He invited neighbors over, who, when they drank, pronounced it pure sulphur. They took buckets full home, and declared that Crumble would have one of the finest summer resorts in the State.

"This water gets stronger every day," remarked Crumble to a neighbor. "This vein must be very large. Why, if it keeps on improving, we can go down and dig up the sulphur with a spade."

Crumble had several offers to sell, and although he had previously thought of selling his house and lot, he refused to take twice its former value.

"She's boiling with sulphur now," said Crumble, yesterday.

"I don't like it so strong," replied his wife.

"No, for you don't know what good water is. You'd rather drink water without any taste to it."

He went out to the well and came back with a pitcher full of the valuable fluid. He turned out a glass full, drank about half, gagged, turned away and remarked: "She'll be fine by a week from now." However, he went away and hired a man to go down and see if he could not scrape up some of the sulphur.

"See any?" yells Crumble.

"Oh, yes," answered the man.

"Genuine, is it?"

"Yes—w-o-o-o-k."

"What's the matter?"

By this time he arrived at the top and threw out a yellow dog and an old boot. Crumble turned away and heaved. His house and lot can be bought at half price.

Bad thoughts, if cherished, blight virtue, destroy purity, and undermine the stablest foundations of character. They are like rot in timber; like rust in iron. They eat into the man. And when the process has gone on for a while, and there comes the stress of an outward temptation, down they go into a mass of ruin! Ships go out to sea, all bright with fresh paint, their sails all spread and streamers flying; and never come back, never reach port. Why? They met a storm and went down, because they were rotten. Under the paint was decay! Just so bad thoughts, vile, impure thoughts and imaginations, rot the manly oak of character, rust the iron of principle, slacken all the stays of virtue, and leave the man, the woman, to the violence of temptation, with no interior of reserve power to withstand the shock. Bad thoughts fed and fattened are the bottom-vice of society.—Rev. S. Graves, D. D.

DON'T SPOIL YOUR HANDS.—How it looks to see a well-dressed lady, with hands all scratches, burns, or scars! I have wondered if they did not almost wish they could take them off and leave them at home whenever they went in company. Have plenty of soft, thick holders near the stove to take hold of the handles of kettles or pans. Keep a pair of gloves near your sun-bonnet to bring in the wood, work in the garden, or to put on when you sweep, that your hands may not become callous. If they are liable to chap, use plenty of glycerine, or wash them in vinegar, and when you sit down to your sewing, and your hands feel like a nutmeg grater, rub them with camphor, and it will make them feel so soft and pliable that you will be enabled to handle the finest of fabric without its adhering to your fingers.

Mrs. Partington was recently induced to make a trip from Chelsea to Boston, and her nerves were so agitated by the excitement of the trip that as she jumped ashore she exclamed: "Thank Heaven, I'm again on vice versa."

GOOD SUGGESTIONS.

Don't live in the back of your house. The boys will prefer the saloon to the kitchen. Don't be afraid of the coal bill or wood pile. It is cheaper to have a warm parlor than to pay liquor bills. Put books and papers on your tables instead of wine and cider. Clear brains will honor the family record more than drunkards. Marry into the Cheeryble family and keep clear of the Grumblers. Pull the latch string in for gossip, and hang it out for the poor, that yours may be a house of mercy. In a dying world don't spend too much time on ruffles and killing flies. Your children's bodies are worth more than fine clothes, lace curtains or Brussels carpets, and their minds and souls are of eternal worth. Don't starve to-day to riot to-morrow; don't hoard and scrimp for years that you may be generous in your graves. Be your own almoner, and see your children's happiness while they are under the parental roof. Better have a Sunday home service, than break your own and your neighbor's Sabbath by visiting and dining that day. Money laid out in song books, organs, music, teachers and tuners, pays compound interest; brings health to the body, quiet minds, balm to hearts, and makes the home an ante-chamber of the home above. Put your homes into close communication with the church, the school; and keep open house for every good and noble cause. Call to your aid every good agency that will make home-life sweeter, and give the good control of your children's characters. The great things you are going to do for them in the future you had better swap off for the daily little attentions which feed the affections, and mould the character, and bind them to you by heart-cords that never break.

A CROW STORY.—From the fall of the snow to the present, one of the thoughtful matrons of our town has regularly scattered the crumbs from her table in the yard, that the hungry birds might be fed. At first but few came to the banquet, but now scores of different kinds of winter birds enjoy her bounty. Among the number is a crow. At first he approached cautiously, as if aware that his feather was under the ban. But after an unmolested experience of several weeks he grew so trustful as to eat bread from the hands of the little children. But still more remarkable is this: A few days ago that crow brought with him to the premises a lame crow. The last comer sat on the garden fence and cawed alarm. His guide flitted beside him, and after bowing to him and quieting his fears, induced him to trust himself in the garden walk. There the guide strode confidently toward the repast, and the lame crow limped after him. When the latter lagged, the former would turn and assure him of hospitable treatment. The pantomime was as eloquent as speech, and quiet as effective. Presently both reached the spread and enjoyed "a square meal." Since then the two crows make daily visits. —Warren (Va.) Index.

WILL IT PAY?—Young men, as you lift the gleaming wine glass to your lips in the jollity of the night's spree, will it pay? It is a gross insult to call a man a fool. Every man would resent it; but in the suffering of the next morning, with disturbed conscience, aching head, throbbing temples, racking brain, hot, fevered tongue, and all the horrible reaction that might come, does not the victim of aches clasp his burning hands and bitterly call himself "Fool! fool!" It does not pay to begin. First you tolerate it, then you touch and taste it, then you jest and laugh at it, and then revel in it. When it becomes your master, then what? What numbers have been swept down by the hurricane of temptation! In the mad power of this passion they have burst the bonds of a mother's love, trampled a father's counsels in the dust, mocked at reproofs and tears and prayers; and now, with tattered sails, leaking hull, and splintered masts, are drifting on amid howling winds and wintry skies to utter ruin, when they might have reached the haven of peace and security laden with honor and happiness. Truly, it does not pay.—John B. Gough.

An exchange aptly remarks: A large portion of the people do nothing to support their local paper, and yet reap the benefit every day of the editor's work. The local paper is of advantage to every man in the community, and when a man refuses to contribute to the support of the newspaper on the ground that "it does him no good," he might just as well refuse to pay his taxes for the support of the courts and police on the ground that he never breaks the law and does not need any officers. There are men who believe themselves to be honest and pious, who are doing business in every community, and every day appropriating to their own use the fruits of other men's labor by reaping the benefit of the newspaper without contributing a cent to its support.

The efficacy of the ceremony of taking up a collection was proved in a singular way at Los Angeles, Cal., a short time ago, where a mob of several thousand persons collected and threatened to lynch a man arrested for murder. The sheriff was a man of rare tact and presence of mind, and equal to the emergency. He mounted a convenient barrel and urged the mob, as a preliminary to the execution, to take up a collection for the widow and children of the murdered man, and led off himself with five dollars. One of his assistants took a hat and began to circulate it among the crowd, which at once wavered, shook and melted away like the mists of the morning, forgetting in their haste for self-protection the demands of what they considered justice.

OATMEAL.—The use of this article of food has greatly increased during the past few years, and if all we hear and read in its favor be true, it should be used to even a greater extent. The Scotch are noted as a robust and healthy people and they make great use of oatmeal in various ways. We believe it would be far better for our farmer friends to have this article on their breakfast tables every morning than to eat so much fried pork as many do. It must be very healthful and nourishing for children as well as adults. Get a good article and have it well cooked, and served with cream and a little sugar, and it is good. Let those who do not think so try it for six months or a year and they will not do without it ever after.—Golden Rule.

The Journal.

SATURDAY, MARCH 26, 1881.

THE Bank of France is reported to have suspended gold payments.

NORTHAMPTON voted at its town meeting on Monday to open the town library on Sundays from 1 to 9 p. m.

THERE is still talk of an extra session of Congress, but the latest reports are to the effect that President Garfield has decided not to call one.

THE Boers in South Africa have accepted the British terms of peace, which grant them substantially all they have asked, including complete self-government.

GEN. GRANT has resigned the presidency of the New York World's Fair Commission, on account of the lack of interest shown in the enterprise. Hugh J. Jewett has been nominated as his successor.

FALL RIVER has another strike, the employes of the Chace mill having stopped work Monday because of the discharge of a few spinners. There is considerable excitement among the workmen, while the manufacturers feel that it is about time something was done to stop the frequent strikes.

OFFICE SEEKERS are boring the President and members of his cabinet almost to death with their persistent clamorings for places. By and by the good natured officers will become so exhausted that they will have to shut the door in the faces of the applicants, in sheer self-defence. They might as well begin it at once.

A SAD DISASTER occurred at Nice, France, Wednesday night, in the burning of the opera house during a performance. Sixty-three bodies had been recovered up to Thursday afternoon, and many more are supposed to be in the ruins. It is rumored that William Walter Phelps of New Jersey, who has just been nominated as minister to Austria, is among the victims.

PRESIDENT GARFIELD is credited with the desire to make the extinction of polygamy in Utah one of the distinguishing features of his administration, at the same time taking measures to save the 70,000 Mormon children from illegitimacy. To accomplish this he must have and ought to receive the prompt co-operation of Congress. It is a work which has been too long neglected, and the people will rejoice to see something decisive done towards removing this curse from the land.

EX-SECRETARY SCHURZ was warmly received at the complimentary reception and banquet given in his honor at Boston Tuesday evening, the gathering being a large and representative one. Hon. Charles R. Codman presided, and speeches were made by President Eliot of Harvard College, Rev. James Freeman Clarke, Edward L. Pierce, and others. Mr. Schurz spoke in his usual interesting manner, touching on the Indian and civil service questions, and alluding to the enviable condition of our country as compared with other nations. He also took occasion to remind his critics that in considering the Indian question, the view taken by one who sees the whole field is necessarily different from that of those who look only at a limited section, and so they may arrive at widely different conclusions, while equally honest and public spirited.

THE Republican list of committees was adopted by the Senate at Washington last Saturday by the casting vote of the Vice President, and that body is once more in the hands of the Republicans. Senators Dawes and Hoar have important chairmanships, the former being at the head of the committee on Indian affairs, and the latter of the committee on privileges and elections. Ex-Secretary Sherman is second on the finance committee. He should have been given the chairmanship, but Senator Morrill would not make way for him. The Republicans on Thursday endeavored to turn out the Democratic officials and elect their nominees for the offices, but the Democrats filibustered successfully to prevent the change. They say it is unfair to make the change so soon, and while they will not object to it at the regular session, they will filibuster all Summer if necessary to prevent it now.

"RED" LEARY and Billy Connors, the noted cracksmen who were recently arrested and lodged in the Northampton jail for complicity in the robbery of the Northampton National Bank in 1876, are once more at liberty, together with "Shang" Draper, who has been awaiting trial for a year and a half. They were brought before the grand jury last week Friday, but Edson, whose testimony sent Scott and Dunlap to the State prison for the same crime, could remember nothing against them, none of the bank officers had anything to say, and so of course they went free. The only explanation of this lack of evidence seems to be in the fact that the stolen bonds have been returned by Leary. It is understood that after Leary's arrest Scott and Dunlap wrote him that they would testify against him unless he gave up the booty, whereupon he weakened, and all the securities he had left were restored, to the amount of $1,000,000 or thereabouts. So the sufferers by the burglary are once more happy in having their funds back, while the burglars have spent about $200,000 of their ill-gotten gains, and are at liberty to "crack" another bank whenever they see fit, and only Scott and Dunlap, two of their "pals," are left to suffer the penalty of their crime in prison. It may be all right and straight, but to most people it looks like a transaction which needs pretty thorough explanation, to escape the suspicion of having compounded a felony.

AT THE STATE HOUSE.

The House has passed a bill which will be of considerable interest and importance to the people in general, should it become a law. The bill was introduced by Mr. Metcalf of Springfield, the House substituting it for the adverse report of the railroad committee by a vote of 93 to 65, and it proposes to regulate railroad fares throughout the State, by providing that railroads earning more than 6 per cent net shall not charge over two cents a mile; those earning over 4 per cent shall not charge more than 2½ cents, and none shall charge over three cents. It is doubtful whether the Senate will pass so radical a measure, though its adoption would be welcomed by all patrons of the railroads, and in the long run the railroad companies would without doubt be the gainers by the reduction.

A resolve has passed the House providing that the State treasurer may pay the town of Westfield $5000 a year for five years, as a partial relief for the damage and loss occasioned by the flood in December, 1878.

A bill has passed the Senate which provides that the clerk of courts shall draw by lot a new jury for every case, the privilege of challenge being preserved. The Senate has also engrossed the bill giving women the right to vote for members of school committee and on other matters pertaining to public school.

After giving the matter a great deal of attention, the House, by a vote of 128 to 38, has refused to charter any elevated railroads for Boston.

A resolve for the relief of Hampshire county, providing for the payment to the county of $1100 incurred in arresting the Northampton bank robbers, was passed to be engrossed in the Senate last week Friday, but when the news of the release of the robbers and the recovery of the bonds came out, the vote was reconsidered, and the Senate may investigate the matter.

SENATOR CONKLING was made happy on Tuesday by the nomination of several friends for offices in his State, and he evidently considered it the dawn of a brighter day—the reviving of "old times," when, under Grant's regime, he had only to speak the word in regard to any office in New York State, and it was done. But the next day he fairly turned pale with astonishment and anger, when the President sent in the nomination of Judge William H. Robertson, one of his most powerful opponents, for collector of New York, the most important office in the State, Collector Merritt being taken out of the way by a nomination to the consul-generalship at London. Nobody had thought of a change in this office at present, and the nomination took everybody by surprise. Judge Robertson is a man of great strength and ability, and a warm friend of Senator Blaine, and Conkling will use every effort to prevent his confirmation, but probably cannot prevent it. President Garfield seems disposed to recognize all divisions of the party in his nominations, and not allow the "bosses" to monopolize all the fat places. He will have a hard road to travel to do this, and keep them from "souring" on him.

Lawyer Stearns of Chicopee, who is eating oranges in Florida, does not look upon orange culture as a profitable venture for Northern men. In writing upon the subject he says: "I would not advise any one to come here and go into the orange business unless I had something against him, and my wicked inclination to give him a bad twist overcame my Christian training."

In 1880 there were 170 boiler explosions in the United States, which killed 259 persons and wounded 555. Considering the thousands of boilers in use, this is perhaps not a very bad showing, but it is much worse than it should be or would be if it were not for the carelessness or recklessness of those having them in charge.

Rufus G. Walden, the ex-deputy sheriff, town officer and chief engineer of North Adams, who has been in jail for a few weeks, charged with arson, five indictments having been returned against him by the grand jury in January, has been released under $9500 bail.

Young Kalloch of San Francisco, who killed De Young, one of the proprietors of the Chronicle, was acquitted Thursday, and a large crowd evinced their joy by taking the horses from the carriage and dragging him to his home, three miles distant.

For the year ending March 1 there were packed in Chicago 5,752,191, hogs, an increase over the previous year of 1,071,554. This is said to be the largest number ever packed in one year in any city in the world.

An elegantly attired woman, said to be the wife of a wealthy Chicago physician, was arrested in New York Thursday night on the charge of stealing $1250 worth of diamonds from a Chicago broker.

The first through train over the Atchinson, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad, from San Francisco to Kansas City, arrived at the latter city Wednesday morning on time, with 700 through passengers on board.

The Secretary of the Treasury has notified custodians of public buildings that the appropriations for fuel, light and water, not embraced in existing contracts, will be exhausted by the 31st inst.

Wm. Seymour, a dissolute young Chicagoan, called J. M. Cram to the door of his house and shot him dead Monday evening, and then took his own life, because Cram refused him his daughter.

A desperate burglar named Pat Ebert attempted to rob the National Bank at Rolla, Mo., early Wednesday morning, and was shot dead by an officer who was watching for the fellow.

March has been quite tame so far, but is giving us a little wind now, for a change, and may leave us next week in good leonine fashion.

People generally consider that the town has elected an excellent board of selectmen, though not as Strong in its make-up as some had expected.

There were enough split tickets at the town house Monday to make a person's head swim. But the result showed that split tickets do not always carry the day.

J. F. Alberty and George W. Lyman have formed a copartnership, under the firm name of Alberty & Lyman, and have started a hat and bonnet bleachery in the house on Commercial street in the rear of the New London Northern depot.

It is reported that considerable political work was done in town last Sunday, in preparation for Monday's town meeting. It might not be a bad idea to remove this temptation from aspiring office seekers and their friends, by holding the meeting on some other day than Monday.

A special town meeting is called for a week from next Monday—the day of the adjourned meeting—to consider the question of electing road commissioners, in conformity with the provisions of the act adopted by the town on Monday. There should be no question about the town acting favorably on the proposition. The plan is certainly worthy of a trial.

A citizen's horse took a run down Thorndike street Tuesday afternoon, beginning by kicking so near the driver's head that he found it advisable to roll off his seat and leave the horse to his own resources, which proved equal to the smashing of the vehicle, after which he galloped into the village and brought up at one of our stables unharmed.

One of our prominent citizens lost his appetite for breakfast yesterday morning, when he found chalked on the concrete walk in front of his house, in bold characters, the ominous word "Beware!" with a pistol and skull and cross-bones underneath. Have we a Ku Klux organization in our midst? Sound the loud tocsin! Let the clans assemble! Cry aloud, ye watchmen, and arouse the Sportsmen's Club to the defence of our altars and our fires!

The evening freight train south on the New London Northern Railroad last Saturday met with an accident just this side of North Monson, twelve empty platform cars being thrown from the track by a falling brake beam, and piled up into a promiscuous heap. The trucks were pretty well used up, but most of the car bodies will be usable again after repairing. It took several hours to get the track clear, and the steamboat train did not get away from here until 3 o'clock Sunday morning.

A lady living on Central street heard somebody in the yard the other evening, and a moment later there was a noise at the bedroom window, followed by the sudden dropping of the sash. Her little child was asleep in the bedroom, and although she was nearly overcome by fright, she rushed into the room, grabbed the child, and fled to a neighbor's. The search that followed of course brought no burglar to light, as he was probably frightened away by the unexpected fall of the upper sash.

The noon accommodation train from the west, Wednesday, met with quite an accident between Washington and Becket. One of the locomotive driving-wheels broke, throwing the engine, baggage car and smoker from the track, and a freight train going in the opposite direction went through the forward end of the baggage car, making a pretty complete wreck of it. Only the engineer was injured, and he but slightly, but trains were delayed for several hours, and a special train was made up in Springfield to come out on the time of the regular one.

Lawyer A. R. Barker of Holyoke, formerly of this place, is experiencing the frowns of fortune just now, having been lodged in jail at Springfield on Wednesday. He was sued last September by Montraville Ackert of Brimfield, to recover $1000 which he had collected of various fire insurance companies for Ackert. He was arrested, but bailed by E. B. Maynard and George A. Hill of Springfield, the case being continued to the present term of court; but he did not appear at the proper time, and his bondsmen accordingly looked him up and surrendered him. Barker admits collecting the money, but says he agreed not to pay it over until Ackert should give receipts in full, which he refuses to do. He also says Ackert promised him half the amount he might recover from the companies, and so he hardly knows to whom the money belongs. He filed his reasons on Thursday for not appearing when his case was called, claiming that he relied on his counsel to procure witnesses, and that he can prepare a sufficient defense if given time. The judge took the case under advisement.

The Boston & Albany Railroad is making arrangements for an important change in its New York connections. For a long time its relations with the New York & New Haven road have not been satisfactory, the latter road showing a decided leaning toward the interests of the New York & New England on its Boston traffic, and as it felt secure in its monopoly of the only eastern rail outlet from New York, it evidently considered that the Boston & Albany road would have to content itself with the present state of affairs. But the Boston & Albany managers now have arrangements under way looking to the opening of a new and entirely independent line from Springfield to New York. It is proposed to construct a new road from West Springfield to Rising Notch in Southwick, a distance of seven miles, there connecting with the New Haven & Northampton road for New Haven, while from the latter city a new line is to be built parallel to the old road, connecting at White Plains with the Harlem road, over which access will be had to New York. The managers propose to have the new line a solidly built double track road, and to have it in operation inside of two years. It is understood that Vanderbilt will put $1,000,000 at least into the road, while Boston capitalists are ready to furnish the rest of the money. The contracts are not yet signed, but doubtless will be shortly, and as the new line will be some four miles shorter than the old one, with easy grades and slight curves, the run between Boston and New York will be made by fast trains in considerable less time than at present, and cheap night trains will doubtless be put on, taking passengers through for about $3.

THE TOWN MEETING.

Not quite as many of our citizens turned out to the annual town meeting on Monday as last year, when 510 votes were cast for selectmen. The whole number of votes this year was 472, this number being thrown for assessors. The principal interest of the meeting centered in the contest for the office of selectmen. Mr. Strong made a hard push for the place, and his friends were early at the polls, so that the balloting looked very favorable for him during the early part of the day, but the tide turned as the day advanced, and when the polls were closed the result was found to be as follows:

Elijah G. Murdock,	428	Jeremiah Dutton,	14
Henry G. Loomis,	332	Enos Calkins,	11
Henry McMaster,	305	J. A. Squier,	8
David Knox,	150	R. E. Knowlton,	6
Homer C. Strong,	139	Scattering,	3

There was practically no other contest for offices, and the full list of officers chosen is as follows:

Moderator.—Geo. W. Randall.
Town Clerk and Treasurer.—James B. Shaw.
Selectmen and Overseers of the Poor.—E. G. Murdock, H. G. Loomis, H. McMaster.
School Committee for Three Years.—B. M. Fullerton.
Assessors.—David Knox, D. B. Bishop, John Clough.
Tax Collector.—H. A. Northrop.
Constables.—J. A. Palmer, Merrick Whitney, Chas. L. Holden, Daniel W. Palmer, H. A. Northrop, Cornelius Sullivan, Rufus L. Bond, Henry D. Shaw.
Fence Viewers.—J. K. Knox, M. C. Fenton, R. S. Hastings.
Field Drivers.—J. K. Knox, A. J. Bixby, P. M. Shearer, Hubbard Lawrence, Calvin Blodgett, Geo. W. Aspinwall, J. R. Wellman, Hardin Hunt, Barney Gallaher.
Surveyors of Lumber.—E. Warriner, Nathan Howard, Merrick Whitney, J. A. Palmer, F. F. Marcy, M. C. Morey, D. M. Stebbins, R. L. Bond, S. W. Smith.
Measurers of Wood and Bark.—J. A. Palmer, C. L. Holden, C. L. Gardner, D. B. Bishop, S. W. Smith, D. M. Stebbins, Chas. O. Walker, H. C. Strong, R. S. Hastings.
Sealer of Weights and Measures.—John Clough.
Pound Keeper.—R. L. Greenleaf.

It was early voted to postpone action on the appropriations to an adjourned meeting, to be held a week from next Monday—a step which we believe the town will find to be wise and beneficial. The compensation of the tax collector was fixed at $200, including posting warrants; and it was voted to allow the usual 5 per cent discount on taxes paid on or before Aug. 15th. The tramp room and lock-up are to be hired another year; and it was voted to accept the provisions of Chapter 158 of the Acts of 1871, providing for the election of road commissioners.

Palmer still stands by the license system, the vote on the question of granting licenses being 253 yeas to 160 nays. The friends of license looked sharply after their voters, but its opponents seemed to take no great interest in the question, and at least one man said he had to hunt some time before he could find a "no" ballot.

Three ladies marched up to the polls and deposited their ballots for school committee. They seemed to feel a little lonely, and they surely must have been sickened by the disgusting quantity of tobacco smoke, peanut shells and tobacco spit they had to encounter.

BONDVILLE.

The Methodist people netted $75 at their festival last week.

O. A. Parent is putting in a new stock of goods, and has added to his well fitted store a good assortment of paper hangings.

The liabilities of the town are $2667, being $388 in excess of the assets.

BELCHERTOWN.

The ladies, wives of the Masonic fraternity, held a necktie festival at the town house last Wednesday evening. A supper was served to all who wished it, after which all joined in dancing. A general good time was enjoyed by all, and the proceeds netted some $60. This sum, in addition to what has already been raised, will be sufficient to pay for the new organ placed in the Masonic room last Christmas.

THREE RIVERS.

A meeting was held last evening to organize a chapter of the Golden Rule Alliance.

Three young men of this place, acting upon the advice of Horace Greely, have left here for Colorado.

BRIMFIELD.

The Hitchcock high school began its Spring term on Tuesday with a good attendance.

The warrant for the town meeting, to come off a week from next Monday, contains 21 articles. The town debt has been reduced about $1000.

It is reported that Postmaster Brown has reconsidered his intention of resigning this Spring, in consequence of a petition having been largely circulated for the appointment of C. A. Homer to the position, in place of J. F. Converse, the assistant postmaster, who had been considered as the probable successor.

WARREN.

Quite a number of new books have been added to the public library.

The last of a series of winter parties was given by Mr. and Mrs. Sumner Hastings at their residence Wednesday afternoon and evening, and was a very enjoyable affair. At seven o'clock a fine supper was served for the thirty-six guests present, after which the evening was socially spent in a very entertaining manner. These gatherings speak very highly, not only of the social qualities, but also of the harmonious relations of this quiet neighborhood.

MONSON.

Considerable new curbing will be put in this Spring in the village.

The recent exhibition of the Sportsmen's Club netted the club something above the expenses, in spite of the unfavorable weather.

Eleven handsome new stained glass windows have been given to St. Patrick's church by different persons, Father McCarthy being one of the contributors.

Hobson & Hall of Worcester will open a skating rink at Central Hall some time next week. The Winslow skate will be used, and judging from the furore in other places the rink will be very popular.

A fair sized audience listened to Prof. Northrop at Central Hall Wednesday evening, on "Village Improvement." Preliminary steps were taken at the close of the lecture to organize a society, having for its object the above named subject.

Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Moffitt were agreeably surprised a few evenings since by a visit from a large party of friends, who left as reminders of their presence a pair of elegant easy chairs. Mr. and Mrs. Moffitt are popular members of the choir of the M. E. church, and their guests were mostly musical friends from that society.

Flynt & Co. made a large split at their quarry a few days ago, measuring 125 feet long, 8 feet wide and 5 feet deep. They are now finishing up the trimmings for the new depot of the Boston & Albany road at Boston, and are to furnish granite for a large building on the Back Bay in that city. A chemist who recently analyzed the Monson granite finds it superior to 13 samples of the best European granite, while its strength is such that it takes a pressure of 554,000 pounds to crush a piece six inches square.

Monroe Poole was awakened the other night by the hooting of an owl, and looking out of the window he saw the bird on a small tree near the house. Taking his long shooting iron he brought his owlship to the ground. It proved to be a horned owl, weighed 4½ lbs., and measured 4 feet 5 inches from tip to tip. Mr. Poole intends to have him stuffed.

The Methodist conference meets in the city of Worcester April 1st. Rev. Mr. Dwight, who has been preaching here the last year, is said to desire a different and larger field. Also, it is understood the presiding elder has suggested a circuit to include Wilbraham, East Wilbraham (Butlerville), Glendale and Hampden, in which case Hampden may not be the resident place of the preacher. Should Mr. Dwight leave here, it is hoped he will get a larger and more promising field of labor.

David R. McCray exhibits samples of cider made the 8th inst. from apples which have laid out all Winter in a large pile. He made a press which gave him more than 20 barrels, and no better cider has been made this season. Mr. McCray has a maple orchard, and is making more than two gallons per day of good syrup. Your correspondent has tried it, and only wishes he could retain the delicious taste constantly.

Constable Beebe arrested Martin Andrews (colored) at his shanty last week Friday night. Andrews had made an assault on Officer Beebe last November, while in the discharge of his duty as an officer, and Beebe had been on the lookout for him since, Andrews keeping secreted or in Connecticut. He is an old offender, having served in the house of correction for drunkenness, larceny, assault and battery, and other crimes. He was held in $400 to appear before the May term of the superior court.

It is expected before the week is out that the new arrangements at the post office will be made. Another improvement we would suggest if there is any way to make it, and that is to have the office more free from tobacco smoke while waiting for the distribution of the mails. It is sometimes simply intolerable.

The Ware Musical Society, assisted by Mrs. W. B. Lawton, are to give a concert at Music Hall Fast Day evening, April 7. A varied and pleasing programme has been arranged, with Mrs. S. B. Bond as pianist, and Edward N. Anderson, conductor. The committee hope to make this one of the best entertainments of the season.

Mr. Munson, of the Mass. Central Railroad, has been in town for the past few days, and we have it direct from him that active preparations are being made, and the road is actually going through Ware, notwithstanding the doubts expressed by many. Capt. Parsons is now purchasing the right of way, in view of commencing the work at once.

Music Hall was well filled Thursday evening to listen to the temperance lecture by Mrs. Amanda Deyo, of the National Temperance Alliance. There is a good deal of interest in the temperance work at the present time, as was shown by the close attention which was given for almost an hour and a half to this address. The temperance people are naturally rejoiced over the no license vote of the town on Monday, by so large a majority that all, those in favor of liquor, as well as the temperance people, expect the officials will do their part to see the law enforced.

The town meeting Monday passed off rather quietly. There was not as much crossfiring as is usually the case, though there was a little spirited debate on the question of selling the town's stock of wines and liquors. The article was finally passed over. L. N. Gilbert was moderator of the meeting, and the following officers were chosen: Treasurer, O. Lane; Clerk, A. F. Richardson; Selectmen, D. W. Miner, P. McMahon, H. Ramsdell; Overseer of Poor for 3 years, P. L. Keefe; School Committee for 3 years, W. W. Miner; Assessors, Benj. Davis, J. W. Breckenridge, T. F. Sherman; Constables, H. O. Caryl, H. Connell, T. Tobin, P. C. Nolan, Wm. Murray, Geo. Lamberton; Road Commissioner for 3 years, C. D. Gilbert, for 2 years, D. W. Miner, for one year, Benj. Davis; Fence Viewers, A. J. Harwood, J. H. Storrs, F. Blair; Tax Collector, D. P. Billings; Sealer of weights and measures, J. B. Green; Field Drivers, F. W. Farrar, Emery Ball, J. I. Harwood; Pound Keeper, E. W. Cummings; Cemetery Agent, O. Lane; Auditors, C. Phipps, W. C. Sheldon, D. P. Billings. The selectmen were chosen a board of health, and the appointment of surveyors of wood and bark was left with the selectmen. The appropriations were: Memorial Day, $100; library, $1000 and dog fund; night and Sunday police, $1000; schools, $7500; school incidentals, $800; interest on town debt, $2500; highways, bridges and railings, $3000; paupers, $2500; salaries of town officers, $1200; contingent fund, $500; cemeteries, $200 and income of W. R. R. R. stock; street lights, $600; rent of Music Hall, $110; sidewalks, $500, to be used by the Village Improvement Association with the approval of the selectmen; town debt, $5000—making a total of $26,510. It was voted to accept the article in reference to road commissioners, and three were chosen. It was also voted that the town officers report in full next year, so that the voters may readily understand each item; to accept the list of jurors submitted; to authorize a discount on all taxes paid on or before August 1st of 5 per cent, and on others paid before October 1st of 2½ per cent. The question of a new school house on North street was referred to a committee, who are to report at an adjourned town meeting, as was also the question of damages to John Sheehe; the article in reference to a new town house was indefinitely postponed without a struggle. Resolutions of thanks in reference to the new library building and the library were passed. The whole number of votes cast for town officers was 523, the largest number ever cast. Only ten ladies voted; if their full number had voted their candidate would have had a majority for school committee. Mr. Ramsdell, who was the only officer elected on the temperance ticket, had but one vote more than J. W. Breckenridge, who was on the other ticket. Several different ones claim to have cast the decisive vote for Ramsdell. The vote on the local option question was yes 197, no 310. It is interesting to compare these figures with those last year on the same question, though in a different form, which was respectively 219 and 185. The meeting was adjourned to a week from next Monday afternoon, at 3 o'clock.

They organized a vigilance committee last week, and taking three ex-convicts, hung them in a tree and whipped them until life was nearly extinct. They were then let down and ordered to leave the country. Fifteen other men were warned to leave within twenty-four hours or they would be hanged, and they all fled.

A Young Men's Christian Association was an active religious agency in nearly every city and large town of the United States ten years ago. Only a few of these organizations are in existence to-day, and the survivors are in the large cities. It was found that they tended to draw young men away from the churches, and, therefore, they lost the countenance of the clergy, who have gradually adopted most of the social ideas on which the associations were conducted.

Rival fairs are to be held in Boston. The Mechanics' Charitable Association is nearly a century old, and its fairs have been successful, the last occurring in 1878. TO THE HONORABLE THE JUSTICES OF THE SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT, next to be holden at Springfield, within and for the county of Hampden, on the fourth Tuesday of April, A. D. 1881.

Humbly shows Peter Verran of Palmer, in said county, that he was lawfully married to Emma Verran, then Emma Bonney, of Sturbridge, in our county of Worcester, and now of Warwick, Kent county, and State of Rhode Island, at Southbridge, in said county of Worcester, on the seventeenth day of January, A. D. 1879, that they have since lived together as husband and wife in said Sturbridge about one month, since which time they have lived separate and apart from each other, and he has ever conducted towards her as a faithful, chaste and affectionate husband, yet the said Emma, regardless of her marriage vows and obligations, on or about the fourteenth day of February, A. D. 1879, at said Sturbridge, committed the crime of adultery with a person to your libellant unknown, but whose Christian name was Liberty, and on or about the twelfth day of October, A. D. 1880, at Centreville, in said Warwick, committed the crime of adultery with some person to your libellant unknown, and on divers other days between her said marriage with him and this date committed the crime of adultery with divers men to your libellant unknown.

Wherefore he prays that the bonds of matrimony heretofore existing between him and the said Emma Verran may be dissolved, and for such further orders and decrees in the premises as to law and justice may appertain.

Dated Jan. 31, 1881. His
PETER ✕ VERRAN.

Gentle Spring.

De gentle Spring am almost here,
De sun am gittin' high;
De snow am gently slidin' out,
De ice begins to fly.

In thirty days or dar abouts,
De grass will take its green;
An' all of us can slosh aroun'
In April mud an' rain.

De robin will begin to rob,
De blue bird will feel blue;
De crow will crow-bar on his way,
De buzzards buzz anew.

Now let us all feel proper glad,
An' lose no time, indeed,
In castin' 'round among our friends,
To berry onion seed.

SOMETHING BEHIND IT.

At the Erie depot over in Jersey City yesterday a farmer-looking young man attracted considerable attention from other waiting passengers by sitting with his arm around the waist of a woman old enough to be his mother, and homely enough to scare a bear into fits. One of the passengers kept such close watch of the pair that the young man finally left his seat, slowly advanced and remarked:

"Kind o' fallish weather we're having now."

"Yes."

"Going out on the train?"

"Yes."

"You notice me hugging that woman over there?"

"Yes."

"Do you call her good-looking?"

"Good-looking? My Heavens! she is the homeliest woman I ever saw in my life; I don't want to offend you, but that's my honest opinion."

"Say, that is just my opinion too!" replied the young man as he lowered his voice. "Did you think I was in love with her?"

"Yes; I reasoned that way."

"There is where you are lame in both legs. I know how old she is and how homely she is, but she is a widder livin' across the street from us, and I am laboring to induce her to trade me an almost bran-new melodeon for an old bass drum. I wish you'd kinder change your seat and give me a chance to feed her gum-drops. She won't melt while she thinks you are watching us, and I can trade that melodeon for a cider mill the minute she gives me possession."

HEATHFULNESS OF MILK.—If any one wishes to grow fleshy, a pint of milk taken on retiring at night will soon cover the scrawniest bones. Although we see a good many fleshy persons now-a-day, there are a great many lean and lank ones, who sigh for the fashionable measure of plumpness, and who would be vastly improved in health and appearance could their figures be rounded with good solid flesh. Nothing is more coveted by a thin woman than a full figure, and nothing will so raise the ire and provoke the scandal of the "clipper built" as the consciousness of plumpness in a rival. In case of fever and summer complaints, milk is now given with excellent results. The idea that milk is feverish has exploded, and it is now the physician's great reliance in bringing through typhoid patients, or those in too low a state to be nourished by solid food. It is a mistake to scrimp the milk pitcher. Take more milk and buy less meat. Look to your milk man; have large-sized, well-filled milk pitchers on the table each meal, and you will have sound flesh and save doctors' bills.—Housekeeper.

HARDLY EVER.—Did you ever know a man that was always preaching retrenchment, that did not make it his particular business to see that his wife practised it?

Did you ever know a man to break any of his farm implements, in the busy season, that he didn't come storming into the house, kick the dog, and find fault with his wife?

Did you ever know a man that wasn't continually reminding his wife that his mother was "the boss cook?"

Did you ever know a man that didn't wonder what his wife wanted of money? Didn't he furnish everything?

Did you ever know a man that didn't try to keep his wife in ignorance of his financial affairs?

Did you ever know a man that went alone to the show that didn't tell his wife that it didn't amount to much, she ought to be thankful she did not go, it was a perfect jam.—Cor. Toledo Blade.

HEADACHE.—A relieved sufferer writes: "I have recently found a remedy that relieves headache, from which I have suffered a great part of the time for many years. I bought five cents' worth (an ounce) of bromide of potash, put it in four ounces (about a gill) of water, and took a teaspoonful four times a day at first. It works wonders, and I feel as if I had a new lease of life. Now I put a teaspoonful of the solution into a half cup of water and take it whenever my head aches or feels oppressed."

"De reason what for we presented de resignation of our pastor was for de cause dat his services had become disbeneficial to de church," was the reason given by a colored trustee in answer to an inquiry as to the pastor's motive for leaving.

Tramp, tramp, tramp, the boys are marching; cheer up, Garfield, they will come; and beneath the starry flag they will cabbage all they can, when they find you in the White House and at home.—Commercial Advertiser.

A married woman said to her husband, "You have never taken me to the cemetery." "No, dear," replied he, "that is a pleasure I have yet in anticipation."

A LADY'S WISH.—"Oh, how I do wish my skin was as clear and soft as yours," said a lady to her friend. "You can easily make it so," answered the friend. "How?" inquired the first lady. "By using Hop Bitters, that makes pure rich blood and blooming health. It did it for me, as you observe."

WILL IT CURE ME?

Said a man whose woebegone countenance and broken down constitution plainly showed traces of disease—a sufferer with Nervous Dyspepsia, in whose stomach the most delicate morsel lay like lead. Refreshing sleep and quiet nerves were strangers to him, and he despaired of ever being well.

We advised him to take

Simmons Liver Regulator,

which he did, and in a short time was not only relieved but cured.

Reader, if you are suffering with Dyspepsia or Liver Disease in any form, do not wait until the disease has taken a fast hold upon you, but use the Regulator when the symptoms first show themselves. It has relieved untold suffering. SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR is not an alcoholic stimulant, but a PURELY VEGETABLE REMEDY that will cure when everything else fails. It is a faultless family medicine. Does not disarrange the system. Is no violent drastic purge, but nature's own remedy. The friend of everyone, and will not disappoint you. A single trial will convince you that it is the cheapest, purest and best Family Medicine in the world.

ASK the recovered dyspeptics, bilious sufferers, victims of fever and ague, the mercurial diseased patient how they recovered their health, cheerful spirits and good appetite--they will tell you by taking Simmons Liver regulator.

TESTIMONIALS.

Westboro, Jan, 25. 1881.

Willard's Patent Truss seems to possess some principles of mechanism well calculated to reach a large number of cases of Hernia hitherto uncontrolled by instruments in common use. Persons so afflicted and disappointed can safely rely on the integrity of Mr. Streeter, the agent, in his guarantee of perfect success. WM. CURTIS, M. D.

Worcester, Dec. 24, 1880.

I have seen the working of Willard's Truss among my patients. I think it a superior instrument, and well calculated mechanically to answer its purpose. It embraces some new principles, and it is worn with ease and confidence by all I know who use it. RUFUS WOODWARD.

King Alcohol's Ride.

Harness the steeds to my car of state,
I'll ride to-day through the world elate,
Through the length and breadth of the world so wide
My car of triumph shall roll in pride.
My pawing coursers, how lithe they come,
Ruin, Remorse, and Riot and Rum,
Brave four-in-hand, methinks we will drive
When no other horses are left alive.

Why, the iron horse, with his breath of steam,
Is thrown from the track by my reckless team,
And low in the dust at their feet has rolled
Many a warrior gallant and bold.
Hurrah! hurrah! now onward we go,
Scattering madness, terror and woe,
As the trampling hoofs beat down the weak,
Yet care not, pause not, for groan or shriek.

That was an orphan, whose dying sigh
Gasped on the stones as we hurried by;
That was a father, his homestead's stay;
That was a youth, the beloved by all,
Whose bright hair wreathed the dust by his fall,
And these—ah! pause not to make a score,
But ride on reckless and strike down more.

Ha! ha! we keep on our terrible course,
Ram and Ruin, Riot and Remorse;
Trample the fields that should yield us bread,
Till they pour out a blood-stained curse instead.
Dost thou boast, oh war, of thousands slain,
Of the dead that strew each battle plain?
But the hosts that down-stricken before me roll,
Bear the death wound on body and soul.

Far float the wrecks on the ocean wide,
There are lower depths, where my wrecks must hide;
No tempest of earth or sea can claim
My name of Destroyer, my cruel fame.
Thus o'er the length and breadth of the land,
King Alcohol rides with his four-in-hand;
Ruin, Remorse, Riot and Rum—
How the demons laugh as they onward come!

IVY GLEN.

"To let?" said the agent. "Ready furnished? For a month? Really, ladies, I'm very much afraid I haven't any property in my hands—not at present, at least—that will meet your expectations. I've plenty of unfurnished houses, and plenty to let for a year. But for a month? There isn't any such real estate in the market—there isn't, really."

"We don't want an unfurnished house," said Angela Frost.

"And we have no occasion to use a house for a year," added Josephine, her tall, blooming young sister.

The agent bit the end of his quill-pen, and looked at them dubiously, from behind the ink-splashed rails of his desk.

"We are school teachers," she said, and we have just a month's vacation; and we want to spend it in a healthful country resort, where I can botanize, and where my sister can sketch in water colors from nature."

"Ah!" said the agent—"ah! Indeed, I'm very sorry, ladies, but I don't think there's any property in the market hereabouts that will meet your ideas."

"What time does the evening stage leave the hotel?" Josephine asked, rather despondently.

"At five, I believe," the agent replied.

And the two ladies went slowly out of the stuffy little room with its high desk, its floor covered with a cheap oil-cloth, and its general atmosphere of stale tobacco smoke.

"I'm very sorry, Angel," said the younger. "The air of these pine-wooded glens is the very thing for your asthma."

"And the little river in the deep gorge is such an exquisite study for your paintings, Jo," said Miss Frost, fondly.

"Couldn't we live in a barn?" suggested Jo, with a comical arch of her eyebrows.

"I am afraid not," sighed Angela.

The real estate agent, in the meantime, had hardly smoked a pipe and read the local paper before the door burst open and a short stout lady in a pink hat and feathers came in.

"Mr. Muggeridge," said she, handing him a key, "you may let Ivy Glen or you may sell it—ready-furnished, with a cow, a poultry house, and the pony chaise thrown in."

"Madam!" said Muggeridge, astonished.

"I'm tired of it," said the lady. "Susie and Jennie are homesick to get back to the city, and so am I. I've been without a servant since Monday, and now I'm going to take the coming stage to town and meet my husband before he starts for Ivy Glen. I dare say he'll be vexed, but I can't help it. And I've left word at the dairy farmhouse for my brother Duke to follow."

"You couldn't let it for a month?" experimentally hazarded Mr. Muggeridge.

"I'd let it for three days," said the lady.

"I could find you tenants for a month," said the agent. "And perhaps at the end of that time something else might offer."

"Very well," said the lady, "there's the key."

And away she went; and Mr. Muggeridge clapped his hat on the back of his head and set off, in hot haste, to the hotel, for an interview with the two young ladies who had so recently left his office.

And so it happened that Jo and Angel Frost took triumphant possession of Ivy Glen, a romantic cottage, half covered with the dark green, glossy leaves of the vine from which it derived its name, with a boudoir, piano, all the pictures garlanded with pressed ferns and dried autumn leaves, and a library of novels.

"Mrs. Fitch must have been a very literary person," said Jo.

"And musical," added Angel.

"As for a servant, one would only be a nuisance," said Jo.

"I'll groom the pony myself," said Angel. "He's no bigger than a Newfoundland dog—the darling."

"And I'll milk the cow and feed the dear little chickens," declared the pretty Jo.

"It's really an earthly paradise," said the elder sister.

"So it is," assented Jo.

The two sisters passed three days of unmitigated happiness in the deep ravines and cool, flower-enameled woods that surrounded Ivy Glen.

Angel made various valuable additions to her herbarium, and Jo sketched leafy nooks, bits of falling water, and sunset effects to her heart's content, until finally a good, old-fashioned rain-storm set in, of a July afternoon, and prisoned them in the cottage parlor.

"How stupid this is," said Jo, starting up from her book, as the twilight shadows brooded darker and darker in the room. "Let's go down to the barn, and talk to Dick and Frizzle. Poor dears! they must be as lonesome as we are."

(Now Dick was the pony, and Frizzle was the cow, and Jo and Angel were already on the most affectionate terms of intimacy with them.)

It was quite dark when Marmaduke Framingham opened the hall door and strode in, shaking the rain-drops from his shoulders, as if he had been a huge Newfoundland dog, and flinging his fishing-creel and tackle on the table.

"Lou!" he called, all over the house, in a cheery, stentorian voice, "Louisa!"

But, as might be expected, no answer was returned; and he went up to a certain pretty little circular-walled room, where he had been wont to keep his slippers, gun-case, and sundry other masculine appurtenances when sojourning with his sister, Mrs. Fitch, at Ivy Glen.

"It's as quiet here," he muttered, under his breath, "as an enchanted castle. Where is Lou? where are the children?"

But he paused on the threshold. Even by the waning twilight he could perceive that a general transformation had taken place.

A pretty easel stood near the window, the tall standards of the old-fashioned dressing-bureau were knotted with blue ribbons, the chairs were freshly draped with chintz, and a fairy work-basket beside the sofa, while upon the table lay a flower-twined gypsy hat, a bunch of wild flowers, and a pair of the tiniest gauntlet-gloves that Mr. Framingham had ever set eyes on.

"Hello!" said Marmaduke, "Lou's got girl company. And she's put 'em in here, by Jove!"

He struck a match, lighted the prettily-painted candles in the brass sconces, and stared blankly around him. At the same moment a clear, flute-like voice sounded below stairs.

"Come in, Angel, quick! Goodness, how the rain drives in at the door. What's this in the hall? A—man's coat!"

"Burglars!" shrieked Miss Angela, who was not strong-minded in practice as she was in theory.

"But there's a light up stairs," cried Jo.

"Preserve us!" cried Angela, beginning to tremble; "the house is on fire! Jo, Jo! don't stir a step! I insist that you shall not go up stairs!"

But Miss Josephine deftly evaded her sister's grasp, and rushed directly up to the little apartment which she had confiscated to her own use.

"Who are you, sir?" she sternly demanded, as, standing in the doorway, her gaze fell upon Mr. Marmaduke Framingham.

"I—I beg your pardon," began that gentleman.

"Leave the house!" said Jo, in the imperial accents of Queen Elizabeth condemning one of her courtiers to death.

"Jo, Jo, don't!" pleaded Angela, who had crept up in her sister's shadow and was now weakly tugging at her dress. "Perhaps he has accomplices outside. Perhaps he is a crazy man."

"Ladies," said Mr. Framingham, "if you will only permit me to explain—"

"Nothing can explain an intrusion like this," declared Josephine.

"My sister, Mrs. Fitch, the occupant of this house—"

"We are the occupants of this house," inexorably interposed Miss Frost. "Mrs. Fitch has left the premises these three days ago."

"I assure you," said Marmaduke, "that I was quite ignorant of any such change of arrangements. I have been on a fishing excursion up the hill, and supposed, of course, that my sister was here—"

("I'm quite sure he is a crazy man," interposed Angel, sotto voce.)

"And as it is such a stormy night, I beg only to be allowed to pass the night in the barn," concluded the suppliant.

"Your sister left word for you at the dairy farm," said Jo, severely.

"But I came round by the other road," said Mr. Framingham, abjectly.

The humor of the thing was too much for Jo—she burst out laughing.

"Angel, do stop twitching, my dear," said she. "Yes, you may sleep in the barn, Mr. —Mr.—"

"Framingham, ladies, at your service," said the disciple of Izaak Walton.

"Mr. Framingham, then," said Jo. "But you must have some tea with us first. I am going to cut some cold tongue, and Angel will make fritters, and we have M. Blot's recipe for chocolate. I'm really sorry that I mistook you for a burglar."

"Or a crazy man," said Angel, apologetically.

"And we will entertain you as hospitably as in us lies," added Jo, with a mischievous sparkle in her eyes.

Mr. Marmaduke Framingham was afterward heard to say that he never spent so delightful an evening in his life. He engaged board at the dairy farm the next day, and instead of following his sister to the city, stayed down among the glens and braes.

And when Josephine Frost's month of vacation had expired she went back to the city to resign her position in the grammar school.

"I am going to be married," she confessed, blushing very prettily, when the mistress asked the reason why.

So Miss Angela Frost went on alone with her career in life, and Mrs. Marmaduke Framingham settled down for life at Ivy Glen.

"For," she said, "I think it is the sweetest spot in all the world."

"So do I," said her young husband.

THE ORIGIN OF THE BANG.

America has so seldom given Europe a new fashion in return for the many it has received, that a great deal of quiet comfort has been taken out of the supposition that the feminine custom of "banging" the hair was borrowed from the Indian squaws of our Western Plains. True, the feminine Indian is a marvel of hideousness, while her bang, when she has one, lends to her ugliness an air of irredeemable animalism and abject depravity; but if only becoming devices were fashionable there would be very little new to record in ladies' journals or to display at churches and theatres. It now appears, however, that the bang is not peculiar to the American Indians, it being quite common among the savages of New Zealand. This fact being admitted, the method of the advent of the fashion in England may easily be surmised. Returned convicts brought this latest sweet thing in hair to their lady friends, who were glad to adopt it for the very reason, probably, that New Zealand's belles did—it saved them the trouble of combing and arranging their front hair. How the fashion spread to the higher orders need not be asked, for whatever is wild, peculiar and unnatural in woman's appearance may always be safely trusted to make its own way in the world.

A representative from down on the Cape was seated in one of the hotels the other evening, with 15 or 20 fellow-members, when one of his constituents came in. Desirous of impressing the latter with the dignity of his position, he introduced him, saying, "Gentlemen, this is Mr.——, and Mr.——; these are members of the Legislature." "Is that so?" answered the constituent, taking in the situation. "Well, I never before saw the force of 'God save the commonwealth!'"

CONCERNING BED-ROOMS.

A physician was lately called to prescribe for a young lady who lives in one of the most charming villas in Learnedville.

"Nothing the matter with her," she declared; "nothing but terrible headaches." Every morning she waked with a headache and it lasted nearly half the day. It had been going on for months—ever since they moved into their new house. The doctor tried all the old remedies and they all failed. Riding and archery were faithfully tested, study and practice were cheerfully given up. Nothing did any good.

"Will you let me see your bed-room?" asked the doctor one day, and he was shown up into the prettiest little nest imaginable.

Nothing wrong about the ventilation. The windows were high and broad and were left open every night, the patient said. The bed stood in one corner against the wall.

"How do you sleep?" says the doctor.

"On my right side, at the back of the bed, with my face to the wall. Lou likes the front best."

"The dickens she does!" says the doctor. "So do I. Will you do me the favor to wheel that bed into the middle of the room and sleep so for a week? Then let me know about the headache."

Doctors are so absurd! The middle of the room, indeed! And there were the windows on one side, and the two doors on the the other sides, and the mantel with its Macrame lambrequin on the fourth side. There was no place for the bed, but just where it stood, in the corner. "Never mind! Sacrifice your lambrequin," urged the doctor—"just for a week, you know."

The lambrequin was sacrificed, the bed moved where it had free air on both sides, and the headache disappeared.

It may be only an exceptionally delicate system that would be induced to actual headache by breathing all night the reflected air from a wall. Yet possibly some of the morning dullness we know of may be traceable to like cause. At any rate, plenty of breathing space around a bed can only be an advantage to everybody.

In visiting three or four newly-built and beautiful houses recently, the lack of a good place for the bed was the most striking feature of the bed-rooms. Some of these rooms were finished in shining mahogony, ebony, or walnut. Some were hung with rich modern tapestry. All were elegant and a few were airy. But in most of the best of them, where was the bed to stand? A bay-window, perhaps, would occupy the middle of one side, another window another, a door another, a mantel-piece another.

THE NIGHT AIR SUPERSTITION.

Before we can hope to fight consumption with any chance of success, we have to get rid of the night air superstition. It is probably the most prolific single cause of impaired health, even among the civilized nations of our enlightened age, though its absurdity rivals the grossest delusions of the witchcraft era.

"Beware of the night wind; be sure and close your windows after dark!" In other words, beware of God's free air; be sure and infect your lungs with the stagnant, azotized, and offensive atmosphere of your bedroom. In other words, beware of the rock spring; stick to sewerage. Is night air injurious? Is there a single tenable pretext for such an idea? Since the day of creation that air has been breathed with impunity by millions of different animals—tender delicate creatures, some of them—fawns, lambs and young birds. Thousands of soldiers, hunters and lumbermen sleep every night in tents and open sheds without the least injurious consequences; men in the last stage of consumption have recovered by adopting a semi-savage mode of life, and camping out-doors in all but the stormiest nights. Is it the draught you fear, or the contrast of temperature? Blacksmiths and railroad conductors seem to thrive under such influences. Draught! Have you never seen boys skating in the teeth of a snow-storm at the rate of fifteen miles an hour? "They counteract the effect of the cold air by vigorous exercise." Is there no other way of keeping warm? Does the north wind damage the fine lady sitting motionless in her sleigh, or the pilot and helmsman of a storm-tossed vessel? It cannot be the inclemency of the open air, for, even in sweltering summer nights, the sweet south wind, blessed by all creatures that draw the breath of life, brings no relief to the victim of aerophobia. There is no doubt that families who have freed themselves from the curse of that superstition can live out healthier in the heart of a great city than its slaves on the airiest highland of the southern Apennines.—Dr. Felix L. Oswald, in Popular Science Monthly.

Rev. Stephen H. Tyng, in a sermon at New York on a recent Sunday, told a story of Abraham Lincoln as follows: "At the close of a scientific convention held in Washington, the members called in a body at the White House to see Mr. Lincoln. As they were waiting in the East Room the President entered. A member addressed him, and after making some rather fulsome remarks said: "Mr. President, we trust during this time of trial in which the nation is engaged God is on our side, and will give us victory." To this Mr. Lincoln replied: 'Sir, my concern is not whether God is on our side. My great concern is to be on God's side, for God is always right."

A little girl of three summers, whose mother was sick and who was attended by the family physician, was at play in the yard one morning at an unseasonable hour for a visit from the medical savant, when she suddenly hastened in with the announcement that the Doctor was coming. Being surprised at so early a call, some of the family went to the door, but no doctor was in view, and the little three-years-old met the inquiry why she thought the Doctor was coming, by saying she "smelt him." It was ascertained that a skunk was the innocent cause of the infantile misconception.

Dean Swift was once dining with a family in which the matron boasted of the number of centuries in which the magical prefix "de" had been the rightful property of her ancestors. The Dean heard the tedious and oft-told tale to the end, and then delivered his opinion of all that sort of nonsense by saying, "Madame, will you kindly help me to another piece of that D—umpling?"

The man who was waiting for something to turn up was rewarded when he stepped upon the edge of a barrel hoop.—Somerville Journal.

To the Spelling Class.

Stand up, ye spellers, now, and spell;
Spell phenakistoscope and knell;
Or take some simple word, as chilly,
Or gauger, or the garden lily.
To spell such words as syllogism,
And lachrymose, and synchronism,
And Pentateuch and saccharine,
Apocrypha and celandine,
Lactiferous and cecity,
Jejune and homœopathy,
Paralysis and chloroform,
Rhino eros and pachyderm,
Metempsychosis, gherkins, basque,
Is certainly no easy task.
Kaleidoscope and Tennessee,
Kamtchatka and dispensary,
Diphthong and erysipelas,
And etiquette and sassafras,
Infallible and ptyalism,
Allopathy and rheumatism,
And cataclysm and belcaguer,
Twelfth, eighteenth, rendezvous, intriguer,
And hosts of other words are found
On English and on classic ground.
Thus Behring Straits and Michaelmas,
Thermopylæ, Cordilleras,
Suite, hemorrhage, jalap and Havana,
Cinquefoil and ipecacuanha,
And Rappahannock, Shenandoah,
And Schuylkill, and a thousand more,
Are words some prime good spellers miss
In dictionary lands like this;
No one need think himself a scroyle
If some of these his efforts foil,
Nor deem himself undone forever
To miss the name of either river—
The Dnieper, Seine, or Guadalquivir.

"HE GETS DRUNK."

"He's the smartest young man in our class."

"Yes, but he gets drunk."

"Oh, but he's so fine-looking, so noble, and so talented withal! His composition yesterday was the very best in our division. He writes splendidly! They say he's written for a magazine, no older than he is, and not out of school yet!—won't he be a great man, though, some day!"

"No, I don't think he will."

"Why not?"

"He gets drunk."

"Oh, that's nothing; a good many smart men get drunk. Every young man has his wild oats to sow; and because a fellow gets a little boozy once in a while, I wouldn't condemn him forever; quite likely he'll outgrow it when he gets older and sees the folly of it."

"More likely that will outgrow him, and, as to his getting a little boozy, I'm afraid he was a good deal so when the boys found him beside the walk, the other night, and had to carry him to his room, dodging around street corners and skulking through by-ways so that none of the professors would see him. I tell you, a person who drinks at all is not to be depended on. The only young men that I have any confidence in are those who let intoxicating liquors entirely alone."

"Well, I don't care; he's good and smart, anyhow and I like him."

"I don't; he gets drunk!"

So the conversation ran on between two schoolmates, who were walking just ahead of me. Ah, how those words, "He gets drunk," kept ringing in my ears! Possessed of a noble manhood and a glorious intellect; blessed with the greatest and best of God's gifts; having the love and approbation of teachers; admired and looked up to by associates; the pride and hope of a fond father, intertwined in the heart and life of a doting mother, united in close and tender bonds with brothers and sisters; holding in his hand the honor and good name of the institution with which he is connected, of the society in which he mingles, and yet—"he gets drunk!"

As a natural consequence that young man who drinks will generally blight the manhood that is within him, change to curses the blessings that are upon him; bring to the dust whatever highborn aspiration, whatever longings for greatness, glory and immortality may be his; blast the fondest hopes of parents, put out the brightness of their future in the darkness of disappointment, pain and sorrow; bring shame and reproach upon brothers and sisters; trample upon the love and confidence of his fellows; shut himself out from all goodness, purity, usefulness and happiness; blot out the image of God that is stamped upon him, and drag himself down lower than the brutes. Aye, so surely does he shut himself out from heaven as "he gets drunk!"—Geraldine Germaine.

ETIQUETTE OF CONVERSATION.

Do not manifest impatience.

Do not engage in arguments.

Do not interrupt another when speaking.

Do not find fault, though you may gently criticise.

Do not appear to notice inaccuracies of speech in others.

Do not allow yourself to lose temper or speak excitedly.

Do not allude to unfortunate peculiarities of any one present.

Do not always commence a conversation by allusion to the weather.

Do not, when narrating an incident, continually say, "you see," "you know," etc.

Do not speak disrespectfully of personal appearances when any one present may have the same defects.

Do not try to force yourself into the confidence of others. If they give their confidence, never betray it.

Do not intersperse your conversation with foreign words and high-sounding terms. it shows affectation, and will draw ridicule upon you.

"Courtesy opens many doors," says the old adage. "This may be true as far as it goes," says a commentator; "but you might stand before a bank building and courtesy till your spinal column was as limber as an old postage stamp, yet the doors wouldn't swing back on their hinges worth a cent."

Alligators build nests about four feet high, resembling haycocks. They are made of mud and herbage. The eggs are deposited in layers, separated by strata of mud about eight inches thick. One nest usually contains from 160 to 200 eggs.

ABOUT TEACHING LANGUAGES.

"Tell me," said Mrs. Amelia Lewis last evening before the New York Philological Society, in Room 30, Cooper Institute—"tell me what benefit is it to children or grown people to learn the dead languages? How many of you who have learned can now, at the age of forty, translate correctly a page of Greek? What conpensation is there for the time and money spent?"

The grave and reverend philologists present were silent. They answered not a word. They are a solemn body of men, and some among then gazed in indignant horror at this woman, who thus, as it were, profaned the occupations of their lives.

Not content with this Mrs. Lewis pitched into the whole science of grammar in all languages and tore it to tatters. Figuratively she walked over the ruins of grammars and danced a wild war dance on the graves of past great grammarians. Declensions, she asserted, were useless. Conjugations learned by rote only stupefied and overloaded with rubbish the infant brain.

Nor came all this from the lips of one ignorant whereof she talked. Latin she quoted. Greek she analyzed. French came glibly from her lips, and German she poured forth unctuously. The learned grammarians of the Philological Society beheld in this ruthless invader of their philological preserve one armed at all points on the subject. She bristled all over with grammatical points. She seemed mistress of all she surveyed. None more than she seemed better acquainted with the venerable grammatical structure in which she rampaged like a destroying angel. For she is the niece of a celebrated English professor who spoke sixteen languages, who educated her, and who likewise, at the end, declared that Greek and Latin should rank behind and not ahead of the live languages.

Mrs. Lewis had announced her lecture as "A Revolution in the Teaching of Languages," and, so far as the time allowed, explained the salient points of her system, one of which is to teach the sound of the words before their meaning or grammatical relation to each other. Combining the definition of a word in an unknown tongue, its grammatical relations to the rest and its pronunciations in one lesson, she declares to be too much for the children's brain. It is thus overloaded and confused. Teach it first by mere "animal imitativeness." "Let them," said she, "get the swing of the sound;" "keep repeating to them a sentence or a verse until they know it by heart." So had her uncle taught her English. Mrs. Lewis lived her first twelve years in Germany. That uncle, as the first step in teaching her gave her the "Vicar of Wakefield" to read. "But I can't read it," said she. "Read," said the inexorable uncle. So she read a few sentences at a time, he giving her first the sound and in after lessons their meaning. Thus in a few months she learned English. A Portuguese gentleman she had similarly taught English, giving him as his first lesson the mere animal imitativeness of a few sentences until he too acquired the "swing of the sound." Then he went on rapidly. In three months he spoke the language.

Mrs. Lewis is a woman of deeds as well as words. In concluding she announced her intention of teaching by her method a class of children to be taken from any common school, either French or German. In three months' time she will bring them before the Philological Society, capable of speaking the language chosen, and subject them to the society's examination. The philologists want to see it done. She will do it.—Graphic.

THE PRESIDENT'S HABITS.

President Garfield's habits in the White House are regular and most exemplary. He is up at 7 o'clock, and before any of his family except his mother, who is an hour ahead of him. The family breakfasts at 8, but before that time the President finds time to glance at the papers. After breakfast, which is over at 8:30, the President goes into his office, and gives directions touching such mail matter as requires his personal attention. He spends probably an hour dictating personal letters to his stenographer. Then he joins his family, has a chat with them for a few minutes, and is ready to greet the howling mob who are barking their shins on the outside. At 2 o'clock the President usually denies further interviews to the office seekers, and at 2:30 takes his lunch with the family. Between 3 and 4 o'clock he reads the New York dailies. Usually between 4 and 5 some members of the cabinet drop in. At 6 o'clock the President dines, and spends the evening with his family, entertaining such personal friends as call. The President is a great lover of children. He enjoys their company, and loves to romp with them. Mrs. Garfield bids fair to make a splendid mistress of the White House. Of course, everything is new to her, but she has the assistance of Mrs. Blaine, whose acquaintance is far-reaching, and who has an agreeable way of making people feel at home. The society people who have met Mrs. Garfield are pleased with her. She has such a sincere, pleasing way, that she makes an impression. Nor is she at all stuck-up because she happens to be in the White House. As to the President's mother, she is already established as a favorite in the public regard.—Washington Star.

The Journal.

SATURDAY, APRIL 2, 1881.

THE loss of life by the burning of the opera house at Nice last week was 61. No Americans were among the lost.

THE Presidency of the New York World's Fair Commission rather goes a-begging. Gen. Grant threw it up after a few weeks, H. J. Jewett declines the proffered succession, and it is not yet known who is to fill the vacancy.

DR. GEO. B. LORING of Salem has been nominated by the President as commissioner of agriculture. The genial Doctor is pretty well posted on agricultural matters, and he will make both a graceful and an able head of that office, without doubt.

BIBULOUS people who visit Wisconsin hereafter will need to beware how they give or accept an invitation to "take suthin'," as the Governor of the State on Tuesday signed a bill, recently passed by the Legislature, prohibiting the practice of "treating," under penalty of arrest and punishment.

THE dignified Senators at Washington seem to have forgotten all about what they were called together for, and instead of acting upon the President's nominations are spending their time in political wrangling, each side hoping to make some capital out of the proceedings for their party. If they want to make some real working capital, they can do it in no other way so well as to attend promptly to their business in hand, and then go home.

ACCORDING to the Washington correspondents President Garfield has lost about a pound of flesh a day since his inauguration, and is so harassed by office seekers and worried about the popularity of his administration that he is unable to get more than two or three hours of sleep at night. There is also talk of trouble in the cabinet over the nominations of Judge Robertson as collector at New York, and the "stalwart" W. E. Chandler as solicitor general, Postmaster General James being credited with the intention of resigning if Robertson is confirmed, and Attorney General MacVeagh with a similar intention in Chandler's case. It is safe to take all these statements with considerable allowance, and quietly await developments. President Garfield has doubtless considered the probable effect of his nominations before making them, and he is not likely to be driven into his grave at once, nor will his cabinet go to smash, because of them and some opposition to them. In his desire to harmonize and please the different elements in his party, and to gratify everybody else as far as possible, the President has very likely been neglectful of his own physical welfare, and he will need to give himself a little more consideration or else break down.

AT THE STATE HOUSE.

In spite of the eloquence of its friends, and the encouraging smiles of a host of ladies in the galleries, the bill to give women the right to vote in town and city affairs was defeated in the House Tuesday by a vote of 123 to 76. The advocates of the measure had the talking all to themselves, the other side apparently contenting themselves with the knowledge that they had the votes.

The committee on federal relations has reported a resolve appropriating $10,000 for the purpose of representing the State at the Yorktown centennial celebration of the surrender of Cornwallis.

The committee on public health has reported a bill "to prevent incompetent persons from conducting the business of apothecaries," which provides for the appointment of three skilled pharmacists as a board of commissioners of pharmacy, who shall register persons now engaged in the business of apothecaries, and examine all persons hereafter desiring to conduct the business, giving them certificates if found qualified. Penalties are provided for apothecaries who are not licensed, and for the selling of any adulterated drugs, as well as for selling intoxicating liquors for other than medicinal purposes.

The House has enacted the bill requiring a standard form of fire insurance policy, and allowing mutual fire insurance companies to insure property for its full value.

Stearns Kendall Abbott has sent in to the Governor a petition for commutation of sentence, declaring that he is wholly innocent of the murder of Mrs. Crue, although admitting that he has been a bad man in other respects.

Representative Wright of Holyoke is tired of waiting for the Connecticut River Railroad to build a new depot in that city, and on Wednesday introduced a resolution in the House instructing the railroad commissioners to investigate the present structure and to require such improvements as they deem necessary.

The House has finally killed the prohibitory bill. When it came to a vote on Thursday, the section submitting the bill to popular vote was stricken out by a vote of 96 to 93, and the bill was then refused engrossment by a vote of 95 to 73. Representatives Cushman of Monson, Dorman of Belchertown, Gilbert of Warren and Root of Barre voted in favor of the bill, and Mr. Peck of Wilbraham against it.

The Senate has voted against disposing of the stock of the New York & New England Railroad owned by the State.

The committee on claims has made three reports on the Shanly Hoosac Tunnel claim. The majority report gives him $45,495 in full settlement, two of the members favor allowing him $129,874 for the same purpose, and two other members of the committee recommend that he have leave to withdraw.

Superintendent Bentley of the New London Northern Railroad started this week on a vacation, for rest and recuperation from overwork.

Three or four inches of snow fell Wednesday night, and the roads, which were just becoming well settled, are once more in a muddy state.

A. L. Hills is about to make over his barn into a dwelling house, adding an ell to it, and is getting ready to dig a cellar on Foster Avenue for that purpose.

The house of the Misses Owen on Fox Avenue was entered in their absence a few days since, and Miss Ada was relieved of her purse and its contents, amounting to about $16.

One of Marcy's horses which had been hired by a drummer unceremoniously left him at Monson the other day, and came home without a driver, bringing up in the stable with no harm done.

A freight car on Conductor Sedgwick's train north on the Ware River road jumped the track yesterday forenoon above Gilbertville, delaying the train, as well as Conductor Francis's down train, about three hours.

Phinney's market wagon was overturned and an axle broken in turning the corner of Knox street too rapidly last Monday morning, and the driver was pitched out unceremoniously, receiving a lame wrist and shoulder by the fall.

Sparks from a locomotive on the Ware River road set fire to the grass adjoining the track near the town house Monday, and the flames went through the cemetery at that point and also swept over Mount Dumpling, burning a piece of sprout land belonging to John Dailey.

There will be a farmers' institute in the Congregational church at Hampden, next week Saturday, under the auspices of the Eastern Hampden Agricultural Society, when Maj. H. E. Alvord of Easthampton will read a paper on "The Co-operative Creamery." Dinner will be furnished by the ladies of the society.

The water power at Blanchardville, which has lain idle for several years, since the burning of the grist mill, is to be sold at auction on the 21st inst., as will be seen from an advertisement in another column. This is a valuable power, and it is to be hoped that some enterprising manufacturer will take hold of and develop it.

The United Workers have prepared an attractive programme for their entertainment at Wales Hall next Thursday evening, when they will present the 2-act drama "Rock Allen, the Orphan; or, Lost and Found;" also the farces "Stage Struck Yankee" and "The Lunatic." Persons who fast through the day will thus be afforded an opportunity to feast in the evening.

Our citizens are to have a chance to try their hands—or feet—at roller skating, as will be seen from our advertising columns. This pastime has proved so popular in other places, there is little doubt of its success here, and the managers propose to use every effort to secure the comfort and pleasure of their patrons, having competent assistants in attendance to initiate them into the mystery of using the skates.

Bank stock was booming at the auction sale in this place on Wednesday, when the executor of the Parks estate sold 6 shares of the Monson National Bank to R. B. Johnson of Holyoke, for the Holyoke Savings Bank, at 156, and 12 shares of the John Hancock National Bank of Springfield to Mr. Wright of that city, for the Fire and Marine Ins. Co., at 136½. This is several notches higher than either stock has sold before.

At the annual meeting of St. Paul's parish on Monday evening the following officers were chosen: Clerk, George Robinson; parish committee, M. W. French, J. A. Squier, R. L. Goddard, O. M. Graves, Stillman Ellis; music committee, Dr. W. H. Stowe, F. G. Sedgwick, Miss Jennie Kenerson; treasurer, S. W. French. The parish committee were appointed a special committee to consider the question of building some horse sheds, and will report at an adjourned meeting.

The union temperance meeting at the Universalist church last Sunday evening was one of the most interesting of the series this season. Rev. Mr. Eaton of Westfield, who supplied the Baptist pulpit during the day, read an address on "Drunkenness as a Sin." On moral and scriptural grounds drunkenness should be judged and punished precisely as other sins. The address was clear and strong. Mr. Willard, of the Andover Theological school, followed with brief remarks. There was a good attendance.

Remember the town meeting next Monday. The voters should be on hand, to look after the appropriations and act on the various matters to come up. The proposition to elect road commissioners is likely to meet with considerable opposition from the old highway surveyors and their friends, but it is to be hoped that the town will decide to give the plan a trial. The roads are certainly not likely to be any worse by the change, and there is at least a fair chance that they may be made much better.

The accident to Mr. Cushman in this village on Wednesday, noted in our Monson items, calls attention anew to the constant danger of similar accidents at the Main street bridge over the railroad. It is a common thing for one or two engines to be puffing back and forth or blowing off steam under the bridge, in full view of passing teams, and even the soberest horse can hardly cross the bridge at such a time without being frightened. The sides of the bridge should be covered, so that horses could not see the track beneath.

Lawyer A. R. Barker of Holyoke, who was last week jailed in Springfield, has secured his release on a $2000 bond, on which he has obtained 21 signatures, and has also obtained a continuance of the case against him. The matter now assumes a different phase by the arrest of Montraville Ackert (who sued Barker) and three or four other parties, on the charge of complicity in the burning of the building on which Barker collected the insurance for Ackert. The officers have been working up this case for several months, and there are likely to be some interesting developments at the hearing before the district court next Monday.

A couple of fellows made an unsuccessful attempt to break open the safe in the depot at West Brookfield last week Friday night, but it resisted their efforts, and they had to content themselves with some change from the drawer and a lot of tickets. They struck this place the next afternoon and went to one of our hotels for something to eat, but learning that officers were on their track they concluded not to wait for any food, and hurriedly took to the woods back of Pine street. The officers followed them up sharply, but they managed to elude them for the time being. They were afterwards captured in Belchertown, but none of the stolen property was found about them, and they were accordingly brought before the district court in this place and sent up for six months on the charge of vagrancy. Other parties seem to have been concerned in the robbery, as the depots at Brookfield and East Brookfield were broken into the same night, and the depot at Rochdale was entered on Saturday night.

C. L. Buell has been chosen chairman of the school committee, and Dr. J. W. Hannum secretary.

BRIMFIELD.

A correspondent writes as follows: "It is a surprise to many that Postmaster Brown has reconsidered his intention of resigning, for the reason stated in the item of last week, as Mr. C. A. Homer is a gentleman whose experience, habits, and general popularity as compared with his competitor, entitle him to the position, as the petition so numerously signed demonstrates. In the event of Mr. Brown vacating the office, it is earnestly hoped that C. A. Homer will be given the preference."

A pair of horses belonging to Merrill Stebbins became unmanageable while coming down the mountain with a load of wood on Tuesday, and ran for some distance, one of the animals finally falling and breaking his neck.

The skating rink for roller skating opened Wednesday afternoon with a good attendance. Messrs. Hopson & Hall, the gentlemanly managers, have been very successful in managing rinks in other places, and will endeavor to make this popular pastime attractive to all their patrons.

L. G. Cushman, former landlord of the Monson House, met with a serious accident Wednesday at the bridge over the B. & A. R. R. in Palmer. His fine pair of carriage horses became frightened at the cars, and turning suddenly, threw Mr. Cushman out and then ran furiously toward Monson. The telephone was used to intercept them, which was easily done near Green's Hotel. The horses and carriage were but slightly damaged. Mr. Cushman struck upon his head and shoulders, and sustained severe injuries about the head, but will probably be around again in a few days.

WARE AND VICINITY.

The concert by the Ware Musical Society on Fast Day evening promises to be of a sufficiently popular character to please all, more than half of the selections being songs, glees, duets, quartets, etc., while there are several choruses and heavier pieces to please the lovers of such music. There should be a crowded house, not only on account of the merits of the concert, but for the encouragement and benefit of Mr. Anderson, the director of the society, who has done so much to arouse the interest of the singers of the whole town.

The Village Improvement Association held their first meeting of the season on Wednesday evening, and are about looking over the ground preparatory to the construction of concrete sidewalks on some of our streets near or leading from Main street. The residents of Water street, North street and other locations should be looking after their interests, and bid liberally, that the improvements may not pass them by.

At the parish meeting of the East Congregational church last week Friday the following officers were chosen: Clerk, G. K. Cutler; Treas., P. H. Sagendorph; Parish Committee, Dwight F. Greenville Gilbert, were chosen to see what arrangement could be made to secure parlors for the society, and are to report at an adjourned meeting to be held April 8. The receipts of the society for the past year were $3218; expenditures, $3249; balance in treasury, $869.

The improvements at the post office, with perhaps the exception of painting, are completed. There have been added 25 new lock boxes and 84 new call boxes. All the old boxes have been renumbered and present a fine appearance. The facilities for doing the business of the office have been greatly improved, as the postmaster and his assistants now have about 64 square feet more of floor room to work in than formerly. The accommodations for the public are also much better, with about 19 square feet more of floor room, the double doors in front made into one broad entrance, an extra door on the side for exit and an extra opening for the delivery of the mail. The public ought to feel that our postmaster has done all he was capable of doing for their accommodation, and be satisfied for the present. Should our town still increase in population for a few years, as much as in the past, even, the time will come when the business will demand more commodious quarters than can be had in the present location.

New Books, Etc.

"A Fair Barbarian," the short novel recently published in Scribner's Monthly, is now issued in book form by James R. Osgood & Co., of Boston, and is retailed for one dollar. To any one familiar with Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett's writings, the fact that she is the author is sufficient recommendation of the book, for "That Lass o' Lowrie's" and "Haworth's" have made themselves an enviable place among American works of fiction. 'A Fair Barbarian" is very different from the other stories named, being much shorter and with less intricacy of plot; but it is very entertaining, and the denouement, wherein English snobbery receives humiliation at the hands of an unconventional, yet sensible American girl, is entirely satisfactory to all believers in the principles of true equality. If Messrs. Osgood & Company are fortunate in having the publication of "A Fair Barbarian," Mrs. Burnett is no less so that her new novel bears the imprint of this well known and popular house. In the reorganization of this firm, Mr. Wm. D. Howells, lately editor of the Atlantic Monthly, has been added to it, and it will be the publishers of his future works, and have the benefit of his judgment and literary taste. It is the aim of the firm to encourage writers young in literary career, giving books to the public in convenient shape and at reasonable price. The attractions of this publishing house are so many and varied that it cannot fail to meet with liberal patronage.

BENEFACTORS.—When a board of eminent physicians and chemists announced the discovery that by combining some well known valuable remedies, the most wonderful medicine was produced, which would cure such a range of diseases that most all other remedies could be dispensed with, many were skeptical; but proof of its merits by actual trial has dispelled all doubt, and to-day the discoverers of that great medicine, Hop Bitters, are honored and blessed by all as benefactors. 2-2

A VERY INTERESTING STORY.—WHY BURNS' FURNITURE STORE LEADS IN SPRINGFIELD.

Some two years ago D. Burns opened a very large store in the old Republican building on Main St., opposite the Opera House. Mr. Burns introduced a new departure for that city. He stocked his four story building with a finer class of furniture than had been kept in that city before. There was a demand for such furniture, but no dealer had had the boldness, or such a sense of the exigency as to carry such a stock. What has been the result? Springfield is now considered next to New York and Boston as a place in which to buy fine quality as well as common furniture. (Mr. Burns keeps a large stock of common furniture.) The other dealers have been toned up by Mr. Burns' example, and though still behind him, are gradually improving. This season Mr. Burns has added largely to his stock of the finer grades of furniture till a walk through his ample warerooms fills one with admiration at the taste displayed in the designs and finish, as well as in the solid and honest workmanship. His large and increasing sales show that a first-class store is appreciated. The magnificent parlor suits and chamber sets he has introduced into the city from the great manufactories of Grand Rapids, Mich., are, as usual, leading the market, and in Springfield Mr. Burns leads in these grades, both as to quality and price. His parlor suits are most elegantly upholstered and contain no excelsior which cheapens the goods more than it does the price. He keeps in this line only first-class work, and guarantees satisfaction. In black walnut and rattan furniture Mr. Burns is acknowledged to lead the city. His furniture this season is of new and very pretty patterns. His best chamber sets have shaving mirrors of bevel plate glass. Mirrors and pier glasses are made to fit any part of a room. Beautiful designs for lambrequins are constantly produced. All his work and goods are offered at the lowest New York prices. The Graves bed lounge is only to be found at Burns'. This lounge has given the most entire satisfaction through the city. Mr. Burns keeps sofa beds, book-cases, mattresses, side-boards, ebony stands and tables, and the celebrated Southern Moss mattress, said to be a great cure for rheumatism. People will see by this little story that a good place at which to get their furniture and be sure of honest dealing, is at the store of D. Burns, 409 Main St., Springfield. They invite all to come and see if this is not true. 4w2

TO THE HONORABLE THE JUSTICES OF THE SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT, next to be holden at Springfield, within and for the county of Hampden, on the fourth Tuesday of April, A. D. 1881.

Humbly shows Peter Verran of Palmer, in said county, that he was lawfully married to Emma Verran, then Emma Bonney, of Sturbridge, in our county of Worcester, and now of Warwick, Kent county, and State of Rhode Island, at Southbridge, in said county of Worcester, on the seventeenth day of January, A. D. 1879, that they have since lived together as husband and wife in said Sturbridge about one month, since which time they have lived separate and apart from each other, and he has ever conducted towards her as a faithful, chaste and affectionate husband, yet the said Emma, regardless of her marriage vows and obligations, on or about the fourteenth day of February, A. D. 1879, at said Sturbridge, committed the crime of adultery with a person to your libellant unknown, but whose Christian name was Liberty, and on or about the twelfth day of October, A. D. 1880, at Centreville, in said Warwick, committed the crime of adultery with some person to your libellant unknown, and on divers other days between her said marriage with him and this date committed the crime of adultery with divers men to your libellant unknown.

Wherefore he prays that the bonds of matrimony heretofore existing between him and the said Emma Verran may be dissolved, and for such further orders and decrees in the premises as to law and justice may appertain.
Dated Jan. 31, 1881. His

Baby Faces.

I passed a pretty cottage on my homeward path one night,
And its windows glowed like crystal in the mellow evening light;
And between the crimson curtains stood an infant bright and fair,
With my own dead darling's hazel eyes and waving sun-dipped hair.

I paused to gaze upon him, and my heart was filled with woe
At the thought of my dear one lying 'neath the Winter's frost and snow;
And I longed to kiss the sweet lips that were pressed against the pane,
For sake of the buried baby-lips that I never shall kiss again.

Oh, babies with happy faces, and eyes so tender and true,
May God in His mercy guide you life's devious windings through!
May never a shadow of sorrow, and never a thought of guile,
Chase the angel light from your sunny eyes, nor darken your baby-smile.

GODIVA IN THE DAIRY.

Some years since, an honest farmer lived in Osage, Ia., whose good wife was not very tidy. When the farmer took his butter to market he was forced to sell at less than his neighbors received, for the reason that it contained specks of dust, etc., which had fallen from the wife's dress while in the making. The farmer scolded, the wife promised to do better, and things went on in the same old way. One day the farmer came home from market in a rage and told the wife that if she didn't put on a clean dress the next time she made butter he would "see her furder." With this blood-curdling threat hanging over her she decided upon a radical change. Said she, "I'll show Joshua that I kin make butter that won't have no dirt in it, nor no hairs nor nothing; see if I don't." When the next butter-making day came around the good woman went into the dairy room and bolted the door. Then she disrobed entirely and took a sponge bath. Then she went about the butter business, clothed only in her cleanliness and good intentions. An Eve before the fall, or Lady Godiva. "I guess there won't no dirt fall from my dress this time," chuckled the matron, and indeed she seemed to have a regular Jay Gould corner on dirt, so far as her dress was concerned. Well, the butter was churned, and spanked and salted and placed in a big tray on the floor to keep cool, preparatory to making into balls and stamping. In doing all this the hard earth floor of the dairy had become a little wet and slippery. In turning round the woman slipped and fell backwards, and sat plumb down into that butter as though it were a cushion placed there to break the fall. Springing to her feet and looking ruefully around at her—photograph—in the soft butter, she sadly exclaimed, "Alas, alas, this must go at about the old price."

A minister out in the far West, who has been troubled a good deal over marriage fees, issued the following circular and price list: "One marriage, plain, $2; ditto, kissing the bride, $3; ditto, trimmed with one groomsman and one bridesmaid, $4; 50 cents extra for each additional groomsman or bridesmaid. Bachelors past 40 will be charged extra. Maids of age, 10 per centum off. Mileage will be charged in long distance matches. Liberal reduction to clubs. Payments in cash; no notes or rebates made for poor goods. Come early and come often."

"John, take this slate, you rascal, and work out this sum: If a cat falls into a well sixty feet deep, and crawls out six feet each day, falling back eight feet every night, how much time would the cat require to get out of the well?" John set to ciphering and covered both sides of his slate with figures; then placing one edge of the slate on his knees, and resting his chin on the other, he gazed into vacancy. "Well, John, how about the cat?" "Father, I ain't got any more room on the slate, but if I had another square I'd have that cat in h—l in three minutes."

John was building a chicken-coop, while little Budge stood by looking on. John bruised his thumb, and exclaimed, "Oh, gracious!"

"What makes you say that?" askod Budge.

"What should I say?" retorted John, for his thumb ached.

"Well," said Budge, after reflecting a little, "you might say the 'mandments."

A woman will work a month to fabricate a delicate protection for a chair, and then when it is in place an edict is promptly issued forbidding any man sitting in that chair, through fear of spoiling the tidy. It's the best chair protector that possibly could be desired.

The fust thing a man thinks ov iz himself; the second thing he thinks ov iz himself again, and the third thing he thinks ov iz himself once more. Bully for man!—Josh Billings.

"I rise for information," said a legislator. "Glad to hear it," said a bystander; "nobody "needs it more."

A man is great, just in proportion to his superiority to the condition of life in which he is placed.

"Judges," said a lawyer, "have always a great advantage over us poor fellows, for they guess last."

That man hath the most friends who needeth not a friend's assistance.

As with a woman so with a horse. His back hair is his mane trouble.

Good looks are a snare, especially to them that haven't got 'em.

WILL IT CURE ME?

Said a man whose woebegone countenance and broken-down constitution plainly showed traces of disease—a sufferer with Nervous Dyspepsia, in whose stomach the most delicate morsel lay like lead. Refreshing sleep and quiet nerves were strangers to him, and he despaired of ever being well.

We advised him to take

Simmons Liver Regulator,

which he did, and in a short time was not only relieved but cured.

Reader, if you are suffering with Dyspepsia or Liver Disease in any form, do not wait until the disease has taken a fast hold upon you, but use the Regulator when the symptoms first show themselves. It has relieved untold suffering. SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR is not an alcoholic stimulant, but a PURELY VEGETABLE REMEDY that will cure when everything else fails. It is a faultless family medicine. Does not disarrange the system. Is no violent drastic purge, but nature's own remedy. The friend of everyone, and will not disappoint you. A single trial will convince you that it is the cheapest, purest and best Family Medicine in the world.

ASK the recovered dyspeptics, bilious sufferers, victims of fever and ague, the mercurial diseased patient how they recovered their health, cheerful spirits and good appetite—they will tell you by taking Simmons Liver regulator.

TESTIMONIALS.

Westboro, Jan. 25. 1881.

Willard's Patent Truss seems to possess some principles of mechanism well calculated to reach a large number of cases of Hernia hitherto uncontrolled by instruments in common use. Persons so afflicted and disappointed can safely rely on the integrity of Mr. Streeter, the agent, in his guarantee of perfect success. WM. CURTIS, M. D.

Worcester, Dec. 24, 1880.

I have seen the working of Willard's Truss among my patients. I think it a superior instrument, and well calculated mechanically to answer its purpose. It embraces some new principles, and it is worn with ease and confidence by all I know who use it. RUFUS WOODWARD.

Worcester, Dec. 24, 1880.

I am pleased to add my testimony to the utility, simplicity, and apparently perfect adaptation of the truss manufactured by Mr. Geo. A. Willard of this city. J. N. BATES, M. D.

The Jackdaw.

[Vincent Bourne, who wrote the following lines in Latin more than a hundred years ago, was an usher in the Westminster School. Cowper, the poet, was a pupil under him, and subsequently gave an English version to the poems of his former master. Toward the close of his life Daniel Webster repeated these lines, expressing his belief that poetry and wisdom had rarely been more happily blended.]

There is a bird who, by his coat,
And by the hoarseness of his throat,
Might be supposed a crow;
A great frequenter of the church,
Where, Bishop-like, he finds a perch,
And dormitroy too.

Above the steeple shines a plate,
That turns and turns, to indicate
From what point blows the weather.
Look up—your brains begin to swim,
'Tis in the clouds—that pleases him,
He chooses it the rather.

Fond of the speculative height,
Thither he wings his airy flight,
And thence securely sees
The bustle and the raree-show
That occupy mankind below,
Secure and at his ease.

You think, no doubt, he sits and muses,
On future broken bones and bruises,
If he should chance to fall.
No! not a single thought like that Employs his philosophic pate,
Or troubles it at all.

He sees that this great roundabout,
The world, with all its motley rout,
Church, army, physic, law,
Its customs and its businesses,
Is no concern at all of his,
And says—what says he? Caw!

Thrice happy bird! I, too, have seen
Much of the vanities of men;
And, sick of having seen 'em,
Would cheerfully these limbs resign
For such a pair of wings as thine,
And such a head between 'em.

ROB'S WEDDING TRIP.

We had grown up together, sweet Molly and I, our parents being near neighbors, and —which does not always follow—firm friends as well.

From the earliest days of my boyhood I had a fondness for the water, haunting the palatial steamboats that floated on the great Mississippi river on whose banks nestled the city in which we dwelt, and at the period to which I am about to refer I had just secured a position as pilot on a small freight steamer.

It was not much of a position, to be sure, nor was there much of a salary attached to it; but, small as it was, Molly and I decided that we could make it answer for two people.

So, early one bright morning, having obtained a day's leave of absence, Mollie and I were married, and stepping into a carriage I had hired for the occasion, we started off, having decided on a day's vacation to a celebrated cave near by, this being all the wedding trip we could allow ourselves.

We had scarcely driven beyond our own street when we were brought to a halt. A messenger whom I recognized as belonging to our steamboat company, hailed me.

"Here's a note for you from the superintendent."

Thus it ran: "Am sorry to have to recall your leave for to-day, but you must immediately go on board the Mobilia, which is ready to start up the river. The pilot is too ill to attend to duty, and you are appointed to take his place for the present."

"There goes our wedding trip all to smash," said I, as Mollie read the note.

"Why so?" she asked.

"You see I must go into the pilot house of the Mobilia."

"Very well," she replied. "We shall just go up the river instead of to the cave. Drive on, Rob, let us go down to the river in state."

"But you cannot go into the pilot house with me, little goose."

"Of course not; but can't I sit on the deck outside?" laughed Mollie, "and we can cast languishing glances at each other."

And so it came to pass that I took possession of the Mobilia's pilot house, my heart glowing with love and pride; with love, for there, just below me, on the little forward deck sat my sweet bride; with pride, because the Mobilia was one of the finest of the beautiful floating palaces of the Mississippi, and to pilot such a one had for years been the height of my ambition.

The steamer was fitted up with a double cabin, one above the other; the upper one opening upon a small deck, reaching out towards the bow, near the center of which, on a raised platform, was placed the pilot house. The deck was always occupied by passengers, and this morning it was particularly crowded, for the boat was heavily laden with people taking advantage of this beautiful weather to make an excursion trip up the river.

Some rough fellow jostled against Mollie's chair after a while, and she rose and passed down into the cabin, "to get a drink of water" she whispered to me as she passed; but I suspect it was to prevent the bursting of the thunder clouds she saw gathering on my brow.

I saw the insolent fellow made no attempt to follow my dear one, so I gave myself up to my own happy thoughts, and looking out on the far distant, peaceful shore of the great river, on whose placid bosom we were moving so swiftly, there rose from my heart a glad, silent hymn of rejoicing.

But suddenly a cry broke from the cabin behind me that effectually changed the current of my thoughts.

"Fire! fire! fire!" A horrible cry at all times, but most horrible of all when it rings forth in the midst of gay, unsuspicious hundreds floating in fancied security in the midst of the waters.

An instant's awe-struck silence succeeded that awful cry, and then 300 voices of men and women united in fearful, heart-rendering shrieks for help.

"Fire! fire! fire!"

Aye! there was no mistake about it, nor false alarm. No one could tell how it had commenced, but there it was, creeping along the roof of the upper cabin, with the deadly flame greedily lapping up every scrap of awning and curtain they could find upon their way, ever and anon darting long tongues of flames down to the floor to clasp the light chairs and tables and settees in their fiery embrace.

As well seek with a sieve to scoop up the waters of the great river on which the Mobilia floated as to try to subdue the roaring, devouring enemy that had seized upon the ill-fated steamer.

The people darted down from the blazing upper cabin to the forward deck below, where as yet the foe had made but little headway, and there our brave captain—who was that rara avis, "the right man in the right place," succeeded in partially quelling the panic.

"Keep quiet," he ordered, "keep quiet, and stay just where you are, or I will not answer for the lives of any of you. The steward will provide every one of you with life preservers, but there is no reason for any person to go overboard—not yet awhile, at any rate, unless suicide is desired. Keep quiet, I say. Pilot, head her straight for the land, half a mile ahead." We were at least twice that distance from the main land on either shore. "Engineer, put on all steam—crowd her on! We will run a race with the foul fiend who has boarded the Mobilia."

There was an instant's pause, and then, with a groan and a surge, with the timbers creaking and straining, and the windows rattling, and as though in mortal terror, the Mobilia gathered herself up to run her last race.

Each passing moment the flames crept on and on, never pausing in their terrible march. Fortunately they leaped upward rather than downward, so that there was as yet but little danger to the panic-stricken crowd on the lower deck.

But the pilot house was directly in the track of the flames, and already their advance guard was beginning to surround me, singeing my hair and eyebrows.

Suddenly there was a murmur among the people below, and the next instant a light form flew up the ladder leading to the little deck by the pilot house, and before I could say a word, my precious Mollie had thrown open the door, and, closing it again, stood at my side.

"Mollie, Mollie!" I cried, "for Heaven's sake go back, go back! Don't you see how the flames are creeping towards us here? Go, go, my dearest, my own true wife! Don't unman me by making me fear for you. Go down where I can feel that you have a chance of safety."

"Rob Thorne," she exclaimed, with her eyes looking straight into mine, "am I not your wife?"

"Surely, surely, thank God!" I muttered. "But go, go!"

"My place is here, just as much as yours is," she answered firmly. "I will stand here, Rob, and if you die, I will, too. We will make our wedding trip together, my dear husband, even if it be into the next world. Keep to your duty, and never mind me, Rob. There is hope for us yet, and if the worst comes, why—" and a grave, sweet smile crept round her lips—"we are still together, love."

I saw it was no use to urge her any more, and besides, something swelled in my throat; so I just gripped the wheel hard and looked right ahead, though everything looked very dim just then; and my devoted darling stood calmly at my side, watching the flames, that were creeping closer and closer upon us, leaping around the pilot house like hungry demons impatient for their prey.

"Thorne," shouted the captain, "come down. Lower her and yourself over the rail. We'll catch you. You cannot stay there any longer. We are very near the shore now, and the rest we'll take our chances on."

It was an awful temptation. I knew that did I follow the captain's advice both Mollie and I would be safe, for I was a good swimmer, and should the boat not reach the shore, I could save her and myself; but then if I did this, would I not deliberately expose every one of the three hundred souls on board to destruction? True, the boat might keep to her course during the short space remaining to be passed merely from the impetus of her approach, but again she might not—and then?

I looked at my dear wife inquiringly.

"Stick to your post, Rob," she said.

"No, sir!" I shouted back. "I shall stick to my post; I shall stay here till I run her clear on the shore or die first."

"My brave Rob—my noble Rob!" murmured Mollie.

But alas for my devoted Mollie! alas for me! Not the pilot house only, but the entire deck around it was now surrounded by flames. It was too late to lower ourselves to the deck below! The railing was all ablaze! My arms, released from their guardianship of the wheel, clasped Mollie close to my breast; but my eyes and brain were busy seeking for some mode of escape from the death that seemed each moment more certain.

All at once my eyes rested on the paddle-box. It had not yet taken fire; the flying spray had saved it. I had only to dash across the flame-swept deck and fling open a little door in its side, which afforded ready access to the wheel, to lower my precious charge to the water beneath. No sooner thought than done.

"Take my hand, Mollie," I said, "and run with me. We shall be saved, after all. Wrap your shawl across your mouth. Now, now—run!"

Leaping down on the deck we sped, hand in hand, to the paddle-box. I dashed open the little door, and, pushing Mollie inside, passed in myself, and drew the door close again, shutting out the eager flames, whose angry roar pursued us as we dropped gently down into the shallow water and crept from beneath the wheel.

Our appearance was hailed with a shout of delight and relief, for all had given us up as lost, and we must have been but for the Heaven-inspired thought of the wheel-house.

Now that the danger was over, poor little Mollie fainted; and no wonder. But she soon came out all right; and as the people began to find out that the "brave little girl," as they called her, was really a bride of only a few hours, and that we were on our wedding trip, there was a regular ovation, followed by nine deafening cheers.

The island upon which the Mobilia had been beached was low, sandy and uninhabited, altogether not an inviting place for 300, without a particle of shelter, to pass half a day upon; yet even in this plight there were few grumblers in our midst.

There was no room in our hearts for any feeling but that of thankfulness for our preservation from a fearful death, and after the peril of the last hour or two it seemed a small matter to wait patiently for the coming of the relief boats that we knew were sure to arrive before many hours went past.

Though some miles from any large city, we knew that the burning steamer must have been seen from the farm houses scattered sparsely along the river bank, and that from these, notices of the disaster would be sent to the nearest town. And so it was. Before nightfall several small steamboats arrived, and after that but a few hours elapsed before we found ourselves safely at home and our adventurous wedding trip at an end.

When I was able to report for duty again, two weeks later, I learned that a noble gift from the Mobilia's passengers—no less a sum than $2000—lay in the bank awaiting my order. Not only this, but the steamboat company voted me a gold medal and the appointment of pilot of the finest steamer on their line.

THE MULE AND THE BEES.

I was visiting a gentleman who lived in the vicinity of Los Angeles. The morning was beautiful. The splash of little cascades about the grounds, the buzz of bees and the gentle moving of the foliage of the pepper trees in the scarcely perceptible ocean breeze, made up a picture which I thought was complete. It was not. A mule wandered on the scene. The scene, I thought, could have got along without him. He took a different view.

Of course, mules were not allowed on the grounds. That is what he knew. That was his reason for being there.

I recognized him. Had met him. His lower lip hung down. He looked disgusted. It seemed he didn't like being a mule.

A day or two before, while I was trying to pick up a little child who had got too near this mule's heels, he kicked me two or three times before I could tell from which way I was hit. I might have avoided some of the kicking, but in my confusion I began to kick at the mule. I didn't kick with him long. He outnumbered me.

He browsed along on the choice shrubbery. I forgot the beauty of the morning. Remembered a black-and-blue spot on my leg. It looked like the print of a mule's hoof. There was another on my right hip. Where my suspenders crossed were two more, as I have been informed. They were side by side—twin blue spots, and seemed to be about the same age.

I thought of revenge. I didn't want to kick with him any more. No. But thought, if I had him tied down good and fast, so he could not move his heels, how like sweet incense it would be to first saw his ears and tail smooth off, then put out his eyes with a red hot poker, then skin him alive, then run him through a threshing-machine.

While I was standing thus thinking, and getting madder and madder, the mule, which had wandered up to a large bee-hive, got stung. His eyes lighted up, as if that was just what he was looking for. He turned on the bee-hive and took aim. He fired. In ten seconds the only piece of bee-hive I could see was about the size a man feels when he has told a joke that falls on the company like a piece of sad news. This piece was in the air. It was being kicked at.

The bees swarmed. They swarmed a good deal. They lit on that mule earnestly. After he had kicked the last piece of bee-hive so high that he could not reach it any more, he stopped for an instant. He seemed trying to ascertain whether the 10,000 bees which were stinging him meant it. They did.

The mule turned loose. I never saw anything like it. He was enveloped in a dense fog of looseness and bees and filled with enthusiasm and stings. The more he kicked the higher he arose from the ground. I may have been mistaken, for I was somewhat excited and very much delighted, but the mule seemed to rise as high as the tops of the pepper trees. The pepper trees were twenty feet high. He would open and shut himself like a frog swimming. Sometimes, when he was in mid-air, he would look like he was flying, and I would think for a moment he was about to become an angel. Only for a moment. There are probably no mule angels.

When he had got to the tops of the pepper trees, I was called to breakfast. I told them I didn't want any breakfast.

The mule continued to be busy.

When a mule kicks himself clear off the earth, his heels seldom reach higher than his back; that is, a mule's fore legs can reach forward and his hind legs backward until the mule becomes straightened out into a line of mule, parallel with the earth and fifteen or twenty feet therefrom. This mule's hind legs, however, were not only raised into a line with his back, but they would come over until the bottom of the hoofs almost touched his ears.

The mule proceeded as if he desired to hurry through.

I had no idea how many bees a hive would hold until I saw that bee-hive emptied on that mule. They covered him so completely that I could not see any of him but the glare of his eyes. I could see from the expression of his eyes that he didn't like the way things were going.

That mule still went on in an absorbed kind of a way.

Not only was every bee of the disturbed hive on duty, but I think the news had been conveyed to the neigboring hives that war had been declared. I could see bees flitting to and fro. The mule was covered so deep with bees that he looked like an exaggerated mule. The hum of the bees and their moving on each other combined in a seething hiss.

A sweet calm and gentle peacefulness pervaded me.

When he had kicked for an hour he began to fall short of the tops of the pepper trees. He was settling down closer to the earth. Numbers were telling on him. He looked distressed. He had always been used to kicking against something, but found now that he was striking the air. It was very exhausting.

He finally got so he did not rise clear of the ground, but continued to kick with both feet for half an hour; next with first one foot and then the other for another half hour; then with his right foot every few minutes, the interval growing longer and longer, until he finally was still. His head drooped, his lips hung lower and lower. The bees stung on. He looked as if he thought that a mean, sneaking advantage had been taken of him.

I retired from the scene. Early next morning I returned. The sun came slowly up from behind the eastern hills. The light foliage of the pepper trees trembled with his morning caress. His golden kiss fell upon the opening roses. A bee could be seen flying hither and thither. The mule lay near the scene of yesterday's struggle. Peace had come to him. He was dead. Too much kicking against nothing.—The Californian.

When two young people start out in life together with nothing but a determination to succeed, avoiding the invasion of each other's idiosyncrasies, not carrying the candle near the gunpowder, sympathetic with each other's employment, willing to live on small means until they get large facilities, paying as they go, taking life here as a discipline, with four eyes watching its perils and four hands fighting its battles—whatever others may say or do, that is a royal marriage. It is so set down in the heavenly archives, and the orange blossoms shall wither on neither side of the grave.

"My brethren," said a Western minister, "the preaching of the gospel to some people is like pouring water over a sponge—it soaks in and stays. To others it is like the wind blowing through a chicken coop. My experience of this congregation is that it contains more chicken coops than sponges."

THE CAT.

Cats are curious cattle. They are selfish. They are grasping. When the attributes were parceled out among the animals the catgut the gift of music. She got it by violins.

No one knows where cats come from; but since the fashion of seal sacks came in, everybody knows where most of them go to. But this is kept a profound secret among the owners of seal garments. They set the seal of secrecy upon it. Purrhaps they are wise.

The cat has nine lives; that is to say, she lives nine times longer than she ought.

This suggests a problem, which lovers of mathematics—there are those, alas! who love them—can puzzle over.

If it takes nine tailors to make one live man, and nine lives to make one cat, what does a catamount to? [Correspondents sending answers will please inclose a three-cent stamp, not for publication, but for the use of the compiler of this authentic history.]

The cat is not subject to tax. Efforts have been made to insert a clause in the dog law to include cats, but thus far the cats have inserted their own claws.

Not only do they escape tax, but the taxidermist also. They do their own stuffing.

At the time of the flood Father Noah endeavored to keep the cat out of the ark, but the cat got her back up and passed in under the guise of a camel.

Until very recently every ship has since that time carried a cat.

Many stories are told about the seafaring cat, including nine tails, which are often red.

In Egypt cats were regarded as sacred animals. To kill one was an offence punishable with death.

The cat remembers this, and to this day takes a fence on the slightest provocation.

BATHROOMS.

Bathrooms or good conveniences for bathing, ought to be found in every farm-house; and yet it is an unpleasant fact that they are often entirely lacking, and that a daily or semi-weekly "all over" bath is something undreamed of by many so-called civilized people who pride themselves upon their neat habits. The really religious duty of keeping the whole body clean does not occur to them, and the neglect of it is one of the numerous ways in which busy, hard-working people abuse themselves. Every villa, pretty country cottage and first-class farm-house now has its well-appointed bathroom, and so may the little three-cornered "shanty," or the log cabin of the pioneer, have its possibilities for bathing. If all cannot command a special room with its ample tubs, showers, douches, and convenient supplies of hot and cold water, all can have at least the seclusion of a closet to which it is easy to carry a basin of water and a sponge. A bit of a room might be built adjoining the kitchen with a sliding or hinged window opening near the cook stove, thus securing warmth in winter and bringing the "hot and cold water" within arm's reach. Then with the addition of a bath tub or even a large laundry tub, with a piece of rubber hose fixed in the bottom to carry off water to the drain, pegs for hanging towels and sponges, and a bracket for holding soaps—and that better than all soaps, a bottle of ammonia—it is a bathroom good enough for a king.—Farm Homes.

The following is said to be the language of gloves: "Yes" is said by letting one glove fall: the gloves are rolled in the right hand to say "No." If you would have it understood that you have become indifferent partly unglove your left hand. To indicate that you desire to be followed, strike your left shoulder with the gloves. "I do not love you any more," is pronounced by striking the gloves several times against the chin: for "I hate you," turn the gloves inside out. "I should wish to be beside you," is said by smoothing the gloves gently. To ask it you are loved, the left hand is gloved, leaving the thumb uncovered. If you wish to make the charming confession "I love you," both gloves are let fall at once. To give a warning, "Be attentive—we are observed," the gloves are turned round the fingers. If you would show that you are displeased, strike the back of your hand against your gloves; "furious," you take them away

The speed at which some wings are driven is enormous. It is occasionally so great as to cause the pinions to emit a drumming sound. To this source the buzz of the fly, the drone of the bee, and the boom of the beetle are to be referred. When a grouse, partridge or pheasant suddenly springs into the air, the sound produced by the whirring of its wings greatly resembles that produced by the contact of steel with the rapidly revolving stone of the knife-grinder. It has been estimated that the common fly moves its wings 330 times per second, i. e., 19,800 times per minute, and that the butterfly moves its wings nine times per second, or 540 times per minute. These movements represent an incredibly high speed even at the roots of the wings; but the speed is enormously increased at the tip of the wings, from the fact that the tips rotate upon the roots as centers.

Children sometimes preach effective sermons without knowing it. Little Freddie was talking to his grandma, who was something of a skeptic. "Grandma, do you belong to the Presbyterian church?" "No." "To the Baptist?" "No." "To any church?" "No." "Well, grandma, don't you think it's about time you got in somewhere?"

The other day Delegate Cannon, the Mormon representative, was asked in a bantering way by a member of Congress, how many wives he had. "I have enough to keep me from interfering with the wives of other men," was Cannon's quick rejoinder.

EARLY RISING.

We venture to suggest that those who have not yet made a fair trial of the practice of early rising should do so. With a cup of tea, and perhaps a slice of bread and butter, to wake him at 6 or 6.30 in the morning, a fairly healthy man may go to his study, and enjoy the priceless luxury of two or three hours of work, when his brain is clear and the distractions of the day's ordinary business have not begun to assail him. The practitioner of an applied science, such as medicine, is especially in need of time for reading or quiet thought. In the active hours of the day this is denied him. At night he is, or ought to be—but for the bad habit of reading by night, probably formed in student days—too weary in mind and body to do good work. In the early morning, with his brain recuperated by sleep, and his whole system rested, he is especially fit for labor. Those who do not feel thus on awaking are either the subjects of some morbid state, or the slaves of a habit which, however common, is essentially unnatural. Some of the difficulties which beset the task of early rising are due to want of method in the act of "getting up." It is comparatively easy to rouse one's self instantly, but to not a few of us it is extremely irksome, and almost impracticable, to rise slowly, that is, taking time to think about it. The man who really wishes to rise early should get up the instant he wakes, and if weakly, or over forty years of age, instead of plunging into cold water or applying cold to the head to rouse himself, he should, as we have said, take a cup of tea or milk to stimulate the organism before expecting to elicit a reaction by a powerful depressant such as the cold bath or douche. Many persons make a mistake in this matter, and by taking their bath immediately after getting out of bed, lower the vitality instead of raising it. In certain cases it is better to leave the bath until after a walk or a spell of work has thoroughly awakened the organism and called out its energies. Experiences in relation to this and other matters must differ as widely as constitutional peculiarities diverge; but, speaking generally, the early morning is the time for serious work, and those who do not so use it find a poor substitute, and one which is by no means hygienic, in the late hours forced upon them. A man cannot get up early if he goes to bed late; but as between the two extremities of the day, the morning is on all accounts the best for brain exercise.—Lancet.

A PLEA FOR SIMPLE WEDDINGS.

In all ceremonials there is a great deal of fashion; and it occurs to us that if a few people of consequence would set the fashion of simplicity in marriage ceremonies, they would be doing a great service to the community. In many memorable instances the higher classes have afforded a noble example by leaving instructions that their funerals should take place without pomp or parade, and already we see the good results which have followed, funerals among the middle classes being, as a rule, much more simple than formerly; and consequently, to our minds, more solemn. Births, deaths and marriages are three events in human life usually classed together, and which the statistician records, and the politician notes; but marriage is the only one of the three in which the chief actors are voluntary and conscious agents. Surely it is the most solemn act of man or woman, and, properly considered, is little allied to pomp and festivity. Think what it is to assume, in a large measure, the responsibility of another's happiness and future well-being! And this is really what in marriage we may be said to do. Surely a solemn and impressive ceremony with simplicity of attire, is more in harmony with the occasion than much pageantry and festivity.—Chambers' Journal.

All the lands upon which the hot springs of Arkansas are located were reserved to the government and are thus dedicated to the public. There are fifty-seven continuously flowing springs, the temperature of which never varies more than two degrees. The waters hold in solution iron, magnesia, sulphur, potash and arsenic, iron being the most valuable ingredient for curative purposes. They afford relief if not positive cure in cases of rheumatism, neuralgia, scrofula, skin diseases, nervous debility, etc., and one spring is spoken of as exclusively devoted to the cure of corns!

In a conversation upon current art topics a mot of one of the wittiest women in metropolitan society was well related. The lady was standing with a friend before Zola's greatly admired picture of Lot and his daughters, which was on exhibition in an art store on Fifth avenue. "Oh!" remarked the friend dolorously, "what do you suppose Lot thought when he beheld his poor wife turned to a pillar of salt?" "I suppose," replied our wit, with admirable gravity, "he thought how he could get himself—a fresh one."

Last Saturday night's fatalities in this place are a pretty strong temperance lecture, and the question is naturally asked, If there were no liquor saloons here would not two men, now dead, be still among the living? The roller skating rink at Wales Hall has proved itself a remarkably popular place of resort the past week, the attendance being large, and increasing each evening. The managers brought 100 pairs of skates here, and they were all in use Tuesday evening. Those who are accustomed to skating on ice acquire the art of managing the rollers quite readily, though few escape an occasional fall, and some of the less expert find the hall frequently filled with stars of considerable brilliancy, as their feet go from under them. This evening there will be an exhibition of fancy skating by Charles Green, an expert from Worcester, and there will be a special session from 10 to 12 this forenoon for children. The rink will be open Monday, Tuesday and Saturday evenings until further notice.

Smith of Brimfield and Patrick Thomas of Palmer.

Our town meetings are very free and easy affairs. The town hall, to begin with, is as cold as a barn, with its one diminutive stove in one corner of the room, where it struggles in vain to keep even that corner comfortably warm, while the open doors are constantly letting in a generous supply of outdoor air. Consequently, men sit or stand with their hats and overcoats on, and sometimes one even forgets to remove his hat when addressing the chair. There are not settees enough in the room to seat over 200 persons, and a large part of them are usually huddled so near together that they cannot be occupied. A majority of those present therefore spend most of their time on their feet. They smoke, they chew, they spit, they eat peanuts, and strew the floor with shells. After this has continued for three or four hours, the open doors are appreciated more than they are when the air is sweeter. It is quite an interesting spectacle, take it all in all, but not a particularly edifying one. But with the present arrangements men can hardly avoid taking cold even with their hats and overcoats on. There should be enough stoves in the room to make the temperature comfortable, and there should be seats enough to accommodate the voters. Then the moderator who orders all hats off, forbids smoking, keeps peanut venders outside, and those who eat them and scatter the shells in the same place, will do a good work, and infuse some dignity into the proceedings.

The Central Massachusetts Telephone Co. is putting in wires preparatory to opening an office and establishing the telephone service in this place. The central office will be in the store occupied by W. R. Milligan and F. D. Barton, where a switch-board has already been put in, and the village will be canvassed in a few days by Chas. F. Fish and George A. Rice for subscribers. The Central Mass. Co. controls the territory between Springfield and Boston, outside of the large places, and owns the old Franklin telegraph line, over which its messages are conveyed. When the Palmer office is opened, conversation can be carried on with Hartford, Springfield, Holyoke, Chicopee, Indian Orchard, Ludlow, North Wilbraham, Worcester, Boston, and numerous intermediate points, and before long nearly every town on the line of the railroad will doubtless be connected with the system. The charge for five minutes' conversation with other towns will vary somewhere from 15 to 75 cents, according to distance. Subscribers can of course talk with parties anywhere on the same circuit without extra charge, and as Monson and Three Rivers are on the same circuit with this place, there will be no charge for those places. There are now 400 telephones in use in Springfield, 277 in Holyoke, 800 in Worcester, and so on, and our business men will probably not be behind those of other places in availing themselves of the advantages of this wonderful instrument. Connection has already been made with Springfield and conversation has been carried on with Hartford with perfect ease and distinctness.

ONE NIGHT'S RECORD — ONE MAN CREMATED; ANOTHER KILLED BY THE CARS.

Fire was discovered in the small house on Thorndike street owned and occupied by Henry Wallace (colored) about 10.30 o'clock last Saturday night, and the building was burned to the ground, the owner perishing in the flames. The fire began in the kitchen, and was burning briskly when discovered. The men who first arrived at the house found the front door open, but smoke was pouring out in such volumes that nobody could enter. As the back part of the house burned away, Wallace's body was discovered on the floor in the front room, near the door, lying on its back, and already partially consumed. Nothing could then be done to recover the body, and it went with the floor into the cellar, where it was almost entirely consumed, the head and limbs being severed from the trunk and the flesh entirely burned from the bones. When the fire had subsided the remains were removed from the ashes, and taken in charge by Selectman Loomis. The cause of the fire is unknown. Wallace was addicted to drink, and was down street in the evening, starting for home about 9 o'clock considerably intoxicated. It is probable that he attempted to build a fire after he reached there, and in some way set the house on fire, and perhaps his own clothing, not being able to get out of the house before he was overcome by the smoke and flames. Some people have entertained suspicions of foul play, from the fact that there were rumors of a dispute between Wallace and some Frenchman about a broad-axe, and the discovery of this axe in the doorway between the front room and the kitchen, during the progress of the flames. There seems no ground for these suspicions, however, and no evidence has been brought to light to justify them. Wallace doubtless used the axe to prepare material for the fire which was to light his own funeral pile. The deceased had a wife, a white woman, who is serving out a two-year's sentence in the woman's prison at Sherborn for keeping a disorderly house.

As the night freight from the east, due at this place a few minutes after 11 o'clock, came out from the Blanchardville cut last Saturday night, the engineer saw something on the track ahead which he at first took to be a newspaper, but soon discovered to be a man, lying face up, directly across the track. It was impossible to stop the train, and when men were sent back, the mangled remains were found to be those of Frederick Ashworth, a single man 35 years of age, who has lived with his brother Samuel at Blanchardville. The head, arms and lower portion of the legs were almost completely severed from the body. A can of oysters, some clams, crackers, etc., were found near him. The remains were taken to the freight house, and afterward removed to his home. Ashworth had been to this village in the evening, making some purchases, and started for home about 10 o'clock, walking as far as Tenneyville with D. B. Packard. Some of the persons who saw him during the evening are positive that he had not been drinking, but Mr. Packard thought his walk indicated differently, and when he left him cautioned him two or three times against following the railroad track, and Ashworth told him he would go around by the road. That was the last seen of him alive. The can of oysters was found a little distance east of the body, indicating that he had partially retraced his steps. Ashworth has been a drinking man, but it is claimed that he had recently turned over a new leaf in this respect. It is rather a singular fact that about four years ago he was rescued from almost the same spot, where he was lying in a drunken stupor.

Judge Robinson had an inquest on the Wallace case Tuesday, and on the Ashworth case Wednesday, when substantially the above facts were elicited.

THE TOWN MEETINGS.

The business of the special town meeting called for last Monday noon, to consider the question of electing three road commissioners, was soon transacted, and the project was defeated by a vote of 82 to 77. An effort was made to adjourn the meeting without taking up the subject at all, but did not meet with much encouragement. A couple of tickets were brought out, printed ballots being distributed around the hall, but they proved of no value after the motion to elect commissioners was negatived, and the meeting was thereupon dissolved.

The adjourned business meeting took the best part of the day in going through the articles in the warrant which had not been acted upon at the annual meeting. The appropriations and votes were as follows:

Appropriations: Schools, $11,000; addition to school house at Palmer, $2500; support of poor, $3500; highways and bridges, $4000; contingencies, $2500; sewers at Palmer, $2000; library association, $500; railings, $200; interest, $115; bridge and highway at Bondville, $4000; soldiers' monument fund, $100; total, $30,415, or $1593 more than last year's appropriations.

Voted, That the selectmen be made highway surveyors, with authority to appoint competent persons in each district to keep the roads and bridges in proper repair, keep up railings and put up new ones as needed, keep roads broken out next Winter, and render to the selectmen an account of the amounts expended.

Voted, To accept Highland Avenue and King street, also continuation of Pine street, as laid out by the selectmen at Palmer.

Voted, That the selectmen be authorized to make a settlement with parties claiming damages on line of Water and Dublin streets; also to settle the claim of Eli Smith.

Voted, That the selectmen be authorized to construct a sewer or sewers, at an expense of not more than $2000, to drain Park street in Palmer, and to procure the services of a practical surveyor in laying out their course.

Voted, To appropriate $2500 for building an addition of two rooms to the present school house in Depot village, the school committee, selectmen and town treasurer to constitute a building committee.

Voted, To authorize the selectmen to purchase land for enlarging the cemetery at Four Corners.

Voted, To choose a board of health. The moderator appointed Dr. J. K. Warren, Dr. W. E. Holbrook, Dr. H. A. Smith, D. B. Bishop and E. B. Gates.

Voted, To authorize the selectmen to commence suit against Louisa H. Smith, to enforce her agreement to support Almira Burlingame, now supported by the town.

The article to see about moving the school house at Three Rivers was passed over, and a motion to build a new four-room school house in that village was lost; while the article to see about building a high school house at Palmer was indefinitely postponed. The question of asking the Legislature to extend the right of suffrage to women was passed over without a vote.

A statement was made to the meeting to the effect that the Boston Duck Co., which is about to build another large mill at Bondville, found the Belchertown side of the river more advantageous for its purposes than the Palmer side, but that the company preferred to have all their property in the same town, and would probably build on the Palmer side if the town would build a road and bridge for them, so that they can reach the freight house across the river without making the long detour necessary by the present road. The following resolution was thereupon unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That the town is in favor of a reasonable expenditure of money for the construction of such road and bridge at Bondville as the convenience of the Boston Duck Co. and the public may require.

Inasmuch as the town voted down the proposition to elect road commissioners, the plan which was afterwards adopted, making the selectmen responsible for the roads and bridges, is considered a very satisfactory settlement of the matter, and it is hoped that under the new arrangement there will be a marked improvement in the condition of the roads generally.

BELCHERTOWN.

Mrs. Cynthia P. White has sold her farm to Patrick Cody, for $1700.

THREE RIVERS.

ENFIELD.

The following appropriations were made at Monday's town meeting: Contingencies, $1000; highways, $1500; schools, $1500; poor, $500; interest, $750. The question of building a lock-up was indefinitely postponed.

BONDVILLE.

Roper; Collector, Daniel Spencer; Assessors, R. A. Blodgett, William L. Webber and William S. Wallis; School Committee for three years, Mrs. F. E. Kinney; Constable, A. L. Roper.

BRIMFIELD.

The town meeting on Monday resulted in the election of the following officers for the ensuing year: Clerk and Treasurer, Henry F. Brown; Selectmen, Cheney Newton, Samuel W. Brown and Edward Bliss; Assessors, Sandford Booth, Edward A. Morgan and Charles A. Homer; School Committee, Thomas J. Morgan; Constables, F. E. Cook and H. A. Webber; Collector, J. P. Webber; Fence Viewers, T. J. Morgan, D. P. Allen and M. H. Baker; Director of Public Library, Samuel W. Brown. Appropriations: Schools, $1400; repairs on school houses, $100; carrying pupils, $100; highways and bridges, $1250; snow bills, $150; poor, $1000; salaries, $500; miscellaneous, $500; memorial, $200; town debt, $500; discount on taxes, $300. The town voted against license, 67 to 25, and against woman suffrage, 47 to 15. The retiring town treasurer, Alfred L. Converse, who has filled the office for 33 years, and is about to leave town, received a unanimous vote of thanks for his faithful and gratuitous services.

The house on Main street first south of the Methodist church, owned by H. M. Needham of New York, was built sixty years ago by Bela Tiffany, and the north roof has never since been shingled. It was covered with shaved pine shingles, and they look good for half a generation more.

E. Dimmick's four-horse team, which was drawing brick from Powers Corner, became frightened Tuesday while he was behind the wagon, and ran about half a mile, colliding with another loaded team, which brought them to a sudden stand-still, with no damage but a broken pole.

Town meeting on Monday resulted as follows: Clerk, O. P. Royce; Selectmen and Overseers of the Poor, F. L. Burley, Wm. L. Needham, F. M. Royce; Assessors, O. P. Royce, Zeno Farrington, Sampson Hulett; Treasurer, A. B. Johnson; Constables, Zeno Farrington, C. M. Gale.

Gibson and Mrs. Marion Tucker; for one year, Dr. Joseph P. Bixby, John T. Combs and Mrs. Frances E. Day; Constables, John B. Sibley and Hosea B. Smith. Appropriations: Contingencies, $1250; town officers, $1200; highways, $2500; poor, $1200; debt, $5000; interest, $1500; fire department, $500; street lights, $500; sidewalks, $500; schools, $7000; repairs, $500. The town voted to have a superintendent of schools, who shall have charge of the high school, with assistants. The members of the committee are expected to serve without pay. West Warren scholars are to have five cents a day for actual attendance at the high school. A committee was appointed to select a site for a new school house at the Center. It was voted to start a fund for a soldier's monument, to buy a new sleigh hearse, and to appropriate $500 for the public library. It was decided not to grant licenses by a vote of 177 to 158.

MONSON.

The town voted No on the license question.

Arba Squier is opening a quarry on land bought of Chapin & Keep.

A small addition is to be made to the finishing room of Reynolds's new mill.

Dwight King has sold a building lot on South Main street to Elliot Brown, who is digging a cellar for a house thereon.

The annual meeting of the First parish will be held next Monday afternoon. The sale of slips last Tuesday evening was more lively than common, and $100 was realized in premiums.

An adjourned town meeting will be held on the 18th inst., to hear the report of the committee on increased school accommodations in district No. 1, and elect officers to fill vacancies.

The roller skating rink at Central Hall grows in popularity. Nearly every one tumbles to it readily, and some make it a duty to attend every session. Wednesday night there was music by an orchestra from Palmer, and an exhibition of fancy skating by Miss Lillian Guertin, 10 years old, and Charles Green, of Worcester, both of whom excited the unqualified admiration of the large audience present. On Fast Day the rink was crowded all day and evening. The managers, Messrs. Hopson & Hall, go to Spencer Monday for a season of two weeks, but may return at the end of that time for another season here. On Saturday night there will be music by a brass band, and a large attendance will close this session of the roller skating rink.

The town elected the following officers at the annual meeting on Monday: Moderator, Rice M. Reynolds; Clerk, Carlos M. Gage; Selectmen and Overseers of the Poor, Rice S. Munn, Alvin A. Gage, Rufus Flynt; Assessors, Calvin S. Pease, Charles R. Dudley, Welcome Converse; Treasurer, Edward D. Cushman; School Committee for three years, Charles R. Dudley, Rev. James Tufts, Lorenzo L. Potter; Fence Viewers, George E. Tucker, Edward P. Keep, William King. The town now has a debt of $4325, a reduction of $2872 having been made the past year. The expenses last year were as follows: Old bills paid, $2204; highways and bridges, $3237; schools and school houses, $7453; poor, $2130; liquor prosecutions, $475; free library, $300; soldiers' memorial, $100; miscellaneous, $1757; total, $17,655. The school committee report the whole number of pupils as 674, with an average term attendance of 438.

INDIAN ORCHARD.

Diphtheria is again raging in our midst.

The cotton factories shut down Fast Day. Work at the valve shops was not suspended.

Dr. N. Barstow intends to sell or rent his place on Hampden street, and leave the Orchard.

The praying band having discontinued holding revival meetings, a lack of interest is evident in the prayer meetings.

Real estate has been changing hands at a surprising rate of late, and it would seem that the "boom" had struck the Orchard.

Owing to the sickness of his family, Rev. F. M. Sprague did not preach last Sunday, and his pulpit was occupied by Rev. Mr. Rice of Springfield.

The young people's lyceum will not hold its regular meeting next Tuesday evening, but some other evening, probably Friday, when an unusually pleasing programme is to be brought out.

Armini Dandelin, an unmarried French woman 30 years of age, suicided by drowning in the canal Wednesday night. She was frightened when 18 years old by a drunken man, and had never recovered. She hinted at her coming death Wednesday, but her intentions were not mistrusted until she was missed.

Last week's Homestead says that an Indian Orchard girl goes to Jenksville once a week in the evening, and returns without an escort, none of the Jenksville young men having spunk to walk home with her. This may be true, but if a Jenksville belle should be at the Orchard of an evening, there would be enough young men ready to escort her home to make a respectable political torchlight procession.

The Chapman Valve Manufacturing Company has just added some new machinery to its iron department, and will soon add some to the brass finishing department. A part of the machinery is being run 12½ hours per day, except Saturdays, when 10 is the limit. A small wooden addition is being put up on the west side of the iron foundry, to accommodate two or three moulders until the new foundry buildings are completed. The plans for the new foundries are not yet perfected, but it is very probable that they will be in separate buildings, and that the brass foundry will be the first built.

Quite a lively runaway occurred last Saturday afternoon. John Ferris had just unloaded a load of groceries under the shed which makes the back store of Wm. P. Emory & Co., when his horse became frightened from some unknown cause, and started on a run, colliding with the hydrant post at the corner of Main and Oak streets, and, leaving the body of the wagon, turned down Main street, taking the wheels some distance, but soon freeing himself he took a turn around the square, and was stopped near where he started. The wagon was badly smashed. The horse of Vigor Bros., attached to their grocery wagon, became startled at Ferris's horse as it ran by, and started after it, but turned up Maple street and was stopped on the hill before doing any damage.

WARE AND VICINITY.

Marsh Brothers continue in businesss, even while their shop is en route for Water street.

The G. A. R. have made arrangements to have Maj. Henry E. Alvord of Easthampton deliver the memorial address on Decoration Day, May 30th.

The premiums bid at the renting of the pews at the Congregational church Thursday amounted to $1541, a larger amount than ever before known, and $218 more than last year.

A woman a few days since visited several of our drinking saloons in search of her husband. Soon after leaving one of them, having been told he was not there, he was kicked from the place. We are hoping to see and hear less of such work after the first of May.

There was a good attendance at the town meeting Monday afternoon. The committee on the building of a new school house on North street reported that they could not recommend building a school house on that lot as it now is, but if about four rods of land could be purchased of Mrs. Chilson and about two rods from Mrs. Miner's lot, both of which join the present lot, they would recommend that a school house be built suitable for three or four schools. Voted to raise and appropriate the sum of $4000 for building a school house on North street. Voted that the school committee, William Hyde, Chas. D. Gilbert, C. S. Robinson and C. A. Stevens be a committee to sell the old school house, grade the lot and build a four-room school house, provided they can secure the lots mentioned in the report of the committee as stated above. Otis Lane withdrew his resignation as treasurer, and it was voted to raise the salary of the treasurer to $100 for the ensuing year. The meeting was adjourned to May 2, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

In active pursuit of pleasure or gain, the inestimable blessing of health is too often forgotten until disease is firmly seated, and the fact only realized by great bodily and mental suffering. The liver is the vulnerable point in most persons, and the disarrangement of the organ involves almost the whole system; hence the reason why under the liver disease there is enumerated such a number of afflictions, and we claim the Simmons Liver Regulator to be a remedy for them all.

Wei De Meyer's Catarrh Cure is unquestionably the result of the most important discovery for the relief of human suffering, since vaccination. Benefactors.—When a board of eminent physicians and chemists announced the discovery that by combining some well known valuable remedies, the most wonderful medicine was produced, which would cure such a range of diseases that most all other remedies could be dispensed with, many were skeptical; but proof of its merits by actual trial has dispelled all doubt, and to-day the discoverers of that great medicine, Hop Bitters, are honored and blessed by all as benefactors. 2-2

A VERY INTERESTING STORY.—WHY BURNS' FURNITURE STORE LEADS IN SPRINGFIELD.
Some two years ago D. Burns opened a very large store in the old Republican building on Main St., opposite the Opera House. Mr. Burns introduced a new departure for that city. He stocked his four story building with a finer class of furniture than had been kept in that city before. There was a demand for such furniture, but no dealer had had the boldness, or such a sense of the exigency as to carry such a stock. What has been the result? Springfield is now considered next to New York and Boston as a place in which to buy fine quality as well as common furniture. (Mr. Burns keeps a large stock of common furniture.) The other dealers have been toned up by Mr. Burns' example, and though still behind him, are gradually improving. This season Mr. Burns has added largely to his stock of the finer grades of furniture till a walk through his ample warerooms fills one with admiration at the taste displayed in the designs and finish, as well as in the solid and honest workmanship. His large and increasing sales show that a first-class store is appreciated. The magnificent parlor suits and chamber sets he has introduced into the city from the great manufactories of Grand Rapids, Mich., are, as usual, leading the market, and in Springfield Mr. Burns leads in these grades, both as to quality and price. His parlor suits are most elegantly upholstered and contain no excelsior which cheapens the goods more than it does the price. He keeps in this line only first-class work, and guarantees satisfaction. In black walnut and rattan furniture Mr. Burns is acknowledged to lead the city. His furniture this season is of new and very pretty patterns. His best chamber sets have shaving mirrors of bevel plate glass. Mirrors and pier glasses are made to fit any part of a room. Beautiful designs for lambrequins are constantly produced. All his work and goods are offered at the lowest New York prices. The Graves bed lounge is only to be found at Burns'. This lounge has given the most entire satisfaction through the city. Mr. Burns keeps sofa beds, book-cases, mattresses, side-boards, ebony stands and tables, and the celebrated Southern Moss mattress, said to be a great cure for rheumatism. People will see by this little story that a good place at which to get their furniture and be sure of honest dealing, is at the store of D. Burns, 409 Main St., Springfield. They invite all to come and see if this is not true. 4w2

Luck of One Day's Fishing.

One morning, when Spring was in her teens—
A morn to a poet's wishing,
All tinted in delicate pinks and greens—
Miss Bessie and I went fishing.

I in my rough and easy clothes,
With my face at the sunshine's mercy;
She with her hat tipped down to her nose,
And her nose tipped—vice versa.

I with my rod, my reel, and my hooks,
And a hamper for luncheon recesses;
She with the bait of her comely looks,
And the seine of her golden tresses.

So we sat down on the sunny dike,
Where the white pond lilies teeter,
And I went to fishing like quaint old Ike,
And she like Simon Peter.

At noon I lay in the light of her eyes,
And dreamily watched and waited,
But the fish were cunning, and would not rise,
And the baiter alone was baited.

And when the time for departure came,
The bag was flat as a flounder;
And Bessie had neatly hooked her game,
A hundred and eighty pounder.

THE GAME LAWS.

It is high time that some other interest besides a "ring," composed of half a hundred sportsmen, had a say regarding the game laws of this State. Game is something in which all are interested, and any law on the subject would serve all alike. The present Legislature will be asked to repeal all laws and provisions and substitute the following:

Any keeper of a hotel, restaurant or boarding-house who substitutes mutton for turtle in making turtle soup shall be fined not less than $50, and in default of payment shall stand committed to the cooler for the term of thirty days.

Any public eating-house keeper who advertises quail on toast, and then furnishes ham on biscuit, shall be deemed guilty of misdemeanor and punished by a fine of not less than $25.

It shall be deemed unlawful for more than five men to pursue the track of one poor, lone rabbit with evil intent.

Any duck hunter who buys birds and passes them off on the boys as having been killed by himself, shall be deemed guilty of piracy, and punished accordingly.

Any person or persons discovered capturing deer or elk by means of a pound net or seines shall be liable to a fine of not less than $25 nor more than $50.

If a fox, on being routed from cover and pursued, takes refuge under a school house, it shall be lawful for the teacher to dismiss the school and lend his assistanee in the capture.

That section of the amended law of 1879 requiring all persons to give 'coons 400 feet the start before pursuing with intent to kill is repealed.

Any person or persons firing over 20 consecutive shots into a flock of decoy ducks, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and punished by a fine of not less than $5.

Any person who shall, after the passage of this act, knowingly falsify as to the number and size of fish taken by him at any time within the past two years, shall be deemed guilty of misdemeanor, and punished by 30 days in the county jail without relief.—Detroit Free Press.

He alone, by whom the hairs of our head are all numbered, can count the widows who are widows because of alcohol; the gray heads that it has made gray; the sad hearts that it has crushed with sadness; the ruined families that it has ruined; the brilliant minds that it has quenched; the unfolding promise which it cankered; the bright and happy boys and girls it has blasted into misery; the young and the gifted whom it has hurried along into dishonored and nameless graves.—Canon Farrar.

A clergyman once, while reading the burial service, came to the place where he must say, "our deceased brother, (or sister)." He did not know which; so, turning to a mourner, he asked whether it was a "brother" or "sister." The mourner innocently replied, "No relation at all, sir—only an acquaintance."

The new steel steamship, the Servia, which is being built for the Cunard line, is nearly ready to launch. It is the biggest vessel in the world, except the Great Eastern, being a tenth of a mile long and 8500 tons burden.

"You don't know how glad I am to see you, Clara, dear!" "Oh, yes, I do," replied Clara dear; "Johnnie told me that he heard you say you would rather die than see me."

A South Carolina man recently sent an order to Springfield for a "setting" of fancy eggs, and inclosed $300 in Confederate money to pay for the same.

A Barnet, Vt., man, who has prospered in the West, has remembered his old friends by sending a car-load of corn to be distributed among them.

To clean zinc is to rub it with a piece of cotton cloth dipped in kerosene. Afterward rub with a dry cotton cloth and it will be as bright as new.

A company has been organized in New York for the construction of a railroad tunnel from the city hall to the Grand Central Depot.

In private life I never knew any one interfere with other people's disputes, but that he heartily repented it.—Lord Carlisle.

Judge Soule of the State Supreme Court will resign and become General Counselor of the Boston & Albany Railroad.

A little girl of five years has died in New York from convulsions caused by jumping a rope.

$500 REWARD.—They cure all diseases of the Stomach, Bowels, Blood, Liver, Nerves, Kidneys and Urinary Organs, and $500 will be paid for a case they will not cure or help, or for anything impure or injurious found in them—Hop Bitters. Test it. See "Truths" or "Proverbs" in another column.

WILL IT CURE ME?

Said a man whose woebegone countenance and broken-down constitution plainly showed traces of disease—a sufferer with Nervous Dyspepsia, in whose stomach the most delicate morsel lay like lead. Refreshing sleep and quiet nerves were strangers to him, and he despaired of ever being well.

We advised him to take

Simmons Liver Regulator,

which he did, and in a short time was not only relieved but cured.

Reader, if you are suffering with Dyspepsia or Liver Disease in any form, do not wait until the disease has taken a fast hold upon you, but use the Regulator when the symptoms first show themselves. It has relieved untold suffering. SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR is not an alcoholic stimulant, but a PURELY VEGETABLE REMEDY that will cure when everything else fails. It is a faultless family medicine. Does not disarrange the system. Is no violent drastic purge, but nature's own remedy. The friend of everyone, and will not disappoint you. A single trial will convince you that it is the cheapest, purest and best Family Medicine in the world.

ASK the recovered dyspeptics, bilious sufferers, victims of fever and ague, the mercurial diseased patient how they recovered their health, cheerful spirits and good appetite--they will tell you by taking Simmons Liver regulator.

TESTIMONIALS.

Westboro, Jan, 25. 1881.

Willard's Patent Truss seems to possess some principles of mechanism well calculated to reach a large number of cases of Hernia hitherto uncontrolled by instruments in common use. Persons so afflicted and disappointed can safely rely on the integrity of Mr. Streeter, the agent, in his guarantee of perfect success. WM. CURTIS, M. D.

Worcester, Dec. 24, 1880.

I have seen the working of Willard's Truss among my patients. I think it a superior instrument, and well calculated mechanically to answer its purpose. It embraces some new principles, and it is worn with ease and confidence by all I know who use it. RUFUS WOODWARD.

Worcester, Dec. 24, 1880.

I am pleased to add my testimony to the utility, simplicity, and apparently perfect adaptation of the truss manufactured by Mr. Geo. A. Willard of this city. J. N. BATES, M. D.

Trailing Arbutus.

Deep in the lonely forest,
High on the mountain side,
Long is the dreary winter,
Short is the summertide;
Just in the breath between them,
Pregnant with sun and showers,
Starts from the earth primeval
Fairest of forest flowers.

All through the sunny summer
Lavish with wealth of bloom,
She, too, has shared life's fullness
Hid in her forest gloom;
Nurtured with dews and sunlight
Richly her buds are fed,
Fresh while the Summer fadeth,
Fresh when its flowers are dead.

Then, when the rude winds seek her,
Threaten her buds to blast,
Fierce assailed by winter,
Fearless she holds them fast;
Fast, till the spring draws nearer,
Fast, till the days grow fair,
Fast, till the April showers
Quicken the chilly air.

Woke by the murmuring breezes,
Kissed by the shining sun,
Up in a burst of transport,
Starteth the prisoned one!
Blushing in fairy clusters,
Pressing a mossy bed,
Leaves of autumn russet
Over her soft couch shed.

Close to the damp earth clinging,
Tender, and pink, and shy;
Lifting her waxen blossoms
Up to the changeful sky;—
Welcome! our springtime darling,
Fresh in thy virgin hue,
Long as the oaks stand round thee,
Yearly thy charms renew.

APPLE BLOSSOMS.

One morning in May, when Mr. Castor of the law firm of Castor & Brush entered his office he found on his desk a bunch of fragrant rose-white flowers with that delicate flush at the heart that makes apple blossoms so irresistible.

"Apple blossoms, sir," his clerk explained. "I spent Sunday in the country and brought them down, thinking you might like to see some."

Mr. Castor's preoccupied face lighted up with pleasure. "Thank you, Mr. Clark," he said. "Get some water, will you, John; we must keep them as fresh as we can; I shall want to take some home to my wife to-night. There, that looks country-like, does it not, Clark?" he said, arranging the blossoms to advantage in the background of law books and stepping back to observe the effect.

Clark smiled, and Mr. Castor went to work at his law cases. But something was the matter with him. His thoughts would go wandering off to the green meadow by the side of the river where Clark told him he had broken the fragrant bunch.

"I wonder," he soliloquized, "whether it is anything like that meadow where—pshaw! what am I thinking of? In a case of ejectment—wonder if I could sing 'Annie Laurie'; I used to know that tune," and he hummed softly to himself:

"Gave me her promise true"—

just as the door was thrown violently open, and John Edson, the most quarrelsome man in New York, as his friends and enemies both agreed, burst in.

"What's the matter now, Mr. Edson?" asked Mr. Castor, rising to give his client a seat.

"Matter? Matter enough! But if he thinks I'm going to submit to this robbery by his knavery he'll find himself very much mistaken. My brother, sir, my own brother—think of that, sir—is trying to cheat me out of my share of our paternal property. I want you to take steps immediately to stop his proceedings. He threatens to bring in a bill that will swallow up every cent—but what's that? Apple blossoms! Where did you get those?"

"Mr. Clark brought them down this morning. Sweet, though rather out of place in a lawyer's office, don't you think so?"

"I don't know," said Mr. Edson, thoughtfully, taking up the tumbler and smelling of the fragrant things. "Where did these grow?"

"Up in a little village in Connecticut. Clark is from the country, you know, and I should think, from his description, it's quite a pretty place. Green meadows and a river, you know, and all that sort of thing. But what do you want me to do?"

"Wait a minute, can't you?" said Mr. Edson, impatiently. "You lawyers are always in a tearing hurry."

Mr. Castor raised his eyebrows, but made no verbal answer to the inconsistent remark, while Mr. Edson leaned back in the chair and looked at the apple blossoms. In a minute he brushed his hand across his eyes.

"It makes me think of old times," he said. "I nearly broke my neck once climbing an old apple tree for blossoms like that to give to Lucy Baird, the prettiest girl in school. I fell from the top branch, and my brother—I never had but one, sir—picked me up and carried me home. He was real good to me all the long time I was sick, too. I think he would have died for me, then, and just to think that now we should be quarreling over a few hundred dollars! Castor, you needn't do anything about this matter, just yet, at least. I—I guess I'll go down and see him. And say—rather silly—you couldn't spare me a little twig with a few of the blossoms, could you?"

Mr. Castor willingly broke off a branch and handed it to him, but he watched Mr. Edson's departure with a comical smile on his countenance.

"Those apple blossoms are doing sad work in this office," he said, laughingly, to Clark. "I've lost one promising case through them already, and as for keeping my own mind on anything legal, it's an utter impossibility. It's evident to my mind that law and flowers were not made to go together."

Mr. Edson, for his part, went down to his brother's office and entered with a little hesitation. The brother, a man older than Edson, with one of those stern, self-repressed faces which say as plainly as words could: "I've a hard life, and I don't care a cent for you; I'll have what I can get, whether you suffer or not," was startled as Edson came in. His eyes rested an instant longingly on the apple blossoms; but the next minute he drew back, asking coldly:

"Did you wish to see me?"

"Yes, George," answered Edson, fingering the flowers awkwardly, "I came to see about that matter—that—that—property, you know. It's a pity that we should quarrel about it, and—well—well, I don't care. You are the oldest and had the hardest row to hoe always, and I guess likely there was fully my share spent on me when I was in college; and, see here, old fellow, I'll do whatever you say if you'll speak to your lawyer and send him up to my office."

There was a moment's silence, and the younger Edson, looking down, saw his brother put his hand to his throat as if he were choking. The next minute his brother was speaking almost as awkwardly as he had done. "It wasn't the money I cared for, but I wanted the old place. I—well, I had some associations with it."

The younger brother started. Associations? What associations of pleasure could George have with the place? There were none, could be none, except with Lucy Baird, for one short year his own wife, now laid away in Greenwood. He sprang forward, "George, did you care for her? You could have won her if you had tried, and you know it. She cared for me first because I was your brother. Did—do you mean to say you gave up the chance of winning her for me."

For a minute or two the Edsons might as well have been two Frenchmen meeting after a long separation. The older was the first to recover himself.

"There, there, John," he said, in precisely the way he used to speak when they were boys together. "I've been hard, but, you see, I've never had a wife to soften me, and I intended to pay you for your share of the property at first out—well, it's no use talking it over. Of course you didn't know, but I kept thinking you might have known if you wanted to. But here, never mind that now. Did you know that Midland bonds are going up? I'll make a good thing out of them yet."

"I can't stay," said Edson, opening the door, "but I'll see you again. Come up to dinner with me, won't you?"

"I will," said the brother, heartily, and with a cordial hand-shake they parted.

The younger brother went straight home and put the precious bunch of apple blossoms, which had been a divining rod to him, showing where the richest treasures of a brother's love lay hidden, into a glass and set it where he could see it often. The older, as he turned to his desk again, saw three petals lying on the floor. He hesitated a moment, and then stooped and quickly gathered them up, laying them reverently in his pocket book.

A POINTED QUESTION.

A gentleman who for years had been more or less under the influence of liquor, and whose red nose and bloated figure stamped him as an inebriate, had gone home to his wife and children in his usual condition. He was not unkind in act or word. It was his delight to play at games with his little ones, as he was able, and to entertain them with wonderful stories.

On this occasion the family were all in the sitting room, and the usual games having been played, little Freddy, a lad about six years of age, had climbed upon his father's knee, and was asking him all sorts of boyish questions. He talked as a child will—of what he would be when he was a man; asked if he would be like papa, and finally, after a long and serious look into his father's face, with every shade of childish curiosity in voice and glance, put to him this bewildering query: "Papa, when I grow up to be a man will my nose be red like yours, and my face all swelled?" Ah! why should his arms so quickly draw that boy to his breast? And why should tears flow and voice tremble as he replied in words and tone that made the mother's heart glad: "No, Freddy, please God, you won't be like me when you get to be a man, and neither your father, my boy, for from this hour he will lead a sober life."

"Be like him!" He had not thought of that before, and the bare possibility staggered him. All the love of his father's heart cried out against such a fate. That boy! His pride going about with a bloated face and poisoned breath? No, no! he was not prepared for that. Never before had he seen his looks so clearly reflected in the boy's—the boy growing to manhood, and honor and affection and reason came to the rescue. The child had preached a sermon no orator could deliver, and innocence and ignorance had accomplished what learning and logic had aimed at in vain. These words went home.

BUNGS.

The bung, says an exchange, is a homely device, lacking altogether the symmetry of an obelisk and having little even of the grace which corks often possess. But its uses are of a most important kind, and wherever liquids are contained in casks or barrels there must the bung be also. It is almost impossible to estimate the quantity of bungs made and used annually, but the number is well up in the millions. They are made of wood well seasoned, and are cut by machinery which is patented. In no country are so many bungs made as in the United States, for nowhere else are the woods which are used so plentiful. Oak, hickory, spruce and pine are among the varieties utilized, and the bung factories are scattered about the country in the neighborhoods where the woods used are found. By cutting the bungs before shipping the cost of transporting the waste material is saved. A great many bungs for beer casks are sent both to Germany and England from this country, not because they are better, but they are cheaper than those made abroad. Bungs are cut by peculiar and ingenious machinery, which works against the grain of the wood, tapering the bung with the grain. In many cases the taper is made but slight in the cutting, and then the bung is submitted to a powerful compression to increase the taper. Bungs of ale and beer barrels are of a standard size, measuring 1 7-8 inches, while bungs for oil barrels are 2 inches. Whiskey barrel bungs are used over and over again. Beer and oil barrel bungs are always picked out, because hammering the staves to start the bungs is sure to injure the coating of the barrels.

An arid old maiden lady in one of our neighboring towns arose in the temperance meeting a few evenings ago and read an original poem beginning, "The lips that touch liquor shall never touch mine." It brought tears to the eyes of the young men present.—Rockland Courier.

Tommy wanted to prove things that he read. "Mother," said he, "do you think Lion would save a little girl's life if she fell into the water?" "I dare say he would, dear," responded the mother, whereupon Tommy cried enthusiastically, "Oh then, mamma, do frow Totsy in!"

A dull old lady, being told that a certain lawyer was lying at the point of death, exclaimed: "My gracious, won't even death stop that man's lying?"

What is that which we wish for, and when obtained we never know we have it?—Sleep.

VILLAGE IMPROVEMENT.

WHAT HAS BEEN ACCOMPLISHED BY THE LAUREL HILL ASSOCIATION, OF STOCKBRIDGE, MASS.

This association had its beginning in the year 1853, and was set on foot entirely by the efforts of one devoted lady—now Mrs. J. Z. Goodrich—whose personal and untiring labors to arouse the people resulted in an organization which has not only secured to the town incalculable benefits, but has become the inspirer and the model of similar associations in other States.

After a thorough canvass of all portions of the town, by way of preparation, a meeting was held in August, which proved an enthusiastic success. Besides its own citizens, many sons of the town, settled elsewhere, were present, or responded by the proxy of a liberal subscription. All the preliminaries of a regular organization under the General Statutes of the State were transacted. By its constitution membership was attainable by an adult on the payment of $1, and 25 cents by a child, or on the part of the latter, by the planting of a tree under direction, and every child was encouraged by this means to erect a memorial of him or herself, to bear thereafter the name of the planter.

A remarkable knoll, where magnificent rocks are overhung by a forestry of oaks and pines, was purchased some years previously and presented to the village as a pleasure ground, by a public-spirited citizen. An abundant undergrowth of Laurels, suggested a name for the locality, and also the name of the Association. An aggregate of about $1400 in cash and available subscriptions enabled it to commence operations with vigor. Its attention was primarily directed to improvements upon this hill; then extended to the village cemetery, whose ruinous fence was replaced by a tasteful structure of marble and iron, within which, in a year or two, was set a hedge of Norway Spruce. The latter is now kept about 15 feet in height, and is a superb wall of perennial green. Within this enclosure walks and drives were constructed, shrubbery and trees planted, leaning monuments set perpendicular, and provision made for repeated mowings. Then the streets of the village were taken in charge; sidewalks straightened, trimmed and graveled; crossings laid; gutters constructed with regard to thorough drainage, and shade-trees set along the sides of every street. Year after year these improvements were pushed farther, and along the roads leading into the town, and the opportunity for pedestrian exercises greatly enlarged. In undertakings involving more expensive labor—such as grading and working the roads in and near the village—the Association has acted in concert with the municipal authorities, adding its own to the town's appropriation, and thus securing a direction in the enterprise. The two have thus enjoyed mutual aid, to the invaluable advantage of both.

The question is often asked us, Were there no opponents of this crusade of improvement? Yes—but they were not numerous, and no long time was required to conciliate them entirely. It is not in human nature, when one puts his premises in order and beautifies them with taste, for his next neighbor to endure for long the contrast suggested by the neglect and dilapidation on his own premises, and the chances are that he will not only fall in with the prevailing spirit, but become a formidable rival in betterments with the other. The little labor and trifling expense necessary to effect a change in his surroundings, of which, when made, he cannot but be proud, ere long convert him from a brake to a spoke in the wheel of progress, particularly when he comes to find—as he will—that there is money in the operation.

Once a year, in the month of August, our Association holds its festival on Laurel Hill. A turf rostrum built against a huge overhanging cliff is the nucleus of operations. On that rural platform sit the officers and invited guests. Around and in front, under the shade of the oaks, on the level plat that once formed the council ground of the Housatonic Indians, stand or sit the town's people; the numerous Summer sojourners and visitors from the neighboring towns, whom the occasion attracts, forming an appreciative audience, sometimes of several hundreds. After prayer (and often music), the choice of officers, and the annual report of the executive committee, an oration is pronounced—usually by some distinguished native of Stockbridge—which is supplemented by brief offerings in prose or verse, and extempore speeches from visitors. After some two hours of these pleasant exercises, the occasion is closed—at times with a dance by the young people on the verdant sod, to the music of the band. This is peculiarly the village festival, and tends to keep alive and transmit the influence of the institution to which so much pleasure and profit are due. In the course of its existence of 25 years, the records of the L. H. Association show an expenditure of $6692, with the following as some of the results:

1. The acquisition by legacies of more than $4000, most of which has been invested in public funds; the revenue from this, with the annual subscriptions, affords available means and secures the permanency of the Association.
